The struggle at Goldfield

Union Shadow of Solitary Owners Tightens Grip

What the Goldfield Strike Means and the Issue at Stake. Newly Made Capitalist, Captain Merriam, Solr. to Remin.

Goldfield, Neb., Jan. 14.—Yesterday morning, Capt. John Merriam, superintendent of the Goldfield Consolidated Mining Company, stepped into a carriage and rode into town, leaving the plant of the company under the charge of John G. Evans, of the company's lawyers. The strike at the Goldfield mine is the result of a long and complicated series of events, and it is not likely that the matter will be settled without a struggle.

A number of events have combined to bring about the present condition of affairs at Goldfield. The company has been unable to pay its workmen nearly two months, and a number of the employees have refused to work. The company has been unable to get supplies, and the company's lawyers have been unable to get the men out of the mine.

The strike began on December 20, when the company refused to pay the men. The men refused to work and the company refused to pay them. The company's lawyers then asked the men to leave the mine, and the men refused. The company then asked the state authorities to arrest the men, and the state authorities refused.

The strike is now in its second week, and the men are determined to hold the mine. The company is determined to put the men out of the mine. The company has asked the state authorities to arrest the men, and the state authorities have refused.

The strike is likely to continue for a long time, and it is not likely that it will be settled without a struggle. The company is unable to pay its workmen, and the workmen are determined to hold the mine. The company's lawyers are unable to get the men out of the mine, and the state authorities are unable to arrest the men. The strike is likely to continue for a long time, and it is not likely that it will be settled without a struggle.
PETTIBONE AND MOYER BOTH FREE!

Rose, Idaho, Jan. 8.—Pettibone and Moyer, both Free when the defense decided to change their pleas from not guilty to guilty.

Pettibone was arraigned in the court of Idaho, where he was found guilty of murdering Dr. Moyer. The jury deliberated for several hours before he was found guilty of murdering Dr. Moyer. The jury deliberated for several hours before they returned their verdict.

Pettibone and Moyer were both sentenced to death by hanging. However, the judge granted them a reprieve, allowing them to appeal their convictions.

The case of Pettibone, on the other hand, is still pending. After Pettibone was found guilty, he appealed his conviction to the state supreme court. His appeal was heard by the court, and the decision is expected to be announced shortly.

In the meantime, Pettibone remains in custody pending the outcome of his appeal.

The case of Moyer is also pending. Moyer is currently awaiting trial on the charges of murder.

The decisions of the courts in these cases will have significant implications for the legal system in Idaho. If Pettibone and Moyer are found guilty, they will face life imprisonment. If they are found not guilty, they will be released.

The trial of Pettibone and Moyer has been a major event in Idaho, attracting widespread attention from the media and the public. The outcome of the trial will determine the fate of these two men and will have far-reaching consequences for the justice system in the state.
