THE REASON WHY IN GERMANY

Germany is in a state of civil war. The reason why is that the German people have lost faith in their government. They believe that their leaders have deceived them and that the war is a complete failure. The people are demanding peace and the resignation of the government. The government, however, is refusing to listen to the people and continues to wage war. This creates a cycle of violence and fear, which further undermines the people's faith in the government.

One of the saddest tragedies of the war is the treatment of the women. In many cases, women are forced to work in factories and serve as nurses in the army. They are often subject to abuse and exploitation. The government has not done enough to protect the rights of women during this time.

The German people are desperate for a change. They are calling for a new government and a new approach to the war. They are demanding peace and a better future for their country. The government, however, is not responding to these calls and continues to push for more war. This is a dangerous situation that must be addressed immediately.

The people of Germany are determined to fight for their rights and to end the war. They are ready to take action to bring about a better future for their country. The world must stand with them and support their cause.

THE CLASS CONSCIOUS T. R.

By Victor L. Bogard

LAST Monday President Roosevelt again sent a message to Congress asking for an extension of the Selective Service Act. The message was received by the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The Selective Service Act is designed to provide for the induction of young men into the armed forces of the United States. The act was passed by Congress in 1917 and has been in effect ever since.

The act provides for the registration of all men between the ages of 18 and 45 who are not exempt from induction. The registration is done under the supervision of local boards of registrars appointed by the President.

The Selective Service Act was originally intended to last for a period of one year. However, it has been extended several times, the latest extension being for a period of two years.

The President's message asks for an extension of the Selective Service Act for another two years. He argues that the extension is necessary to ensure a steady flow of men into the armed forces.

The President's message also asks for an increase in the number of registrants. He notes that the number of registrants has not increased as rapidly as he had hoped.

The President's message is likely to be well received by Congress. The Selective Service Act is popular and has been widely supported by the public.

The extension of the Selective Service Act is expected to be approved by Congress. The act is necessary to ensure a steady flow of men into the armed forces and to provide for the induction of all eligible men.

THE CLASS CONSCIOUS T. R.

By Victor L. Bogard

LAST Monday President Roosevelt again sent a message to Congress asking for an extension of the Selective Service Act. The message was received by the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The Selective Service Act is designed to provide for the induction of young men into the armed forces of the United States. The act was passed by Congress in 1917 and has been in effect ever since.

The act provides for the registration of all men between the ages of 18 and 45 who are not exempt from induction. The registration is done under the supervision of local boards of registrars appointed by the President.

The Selective Service Act was originally intended to last for a period of one year. However, it has been extended several times, the latest extension being for a period of two years.

The President's message asks for an extension of the Selective Service Act for another two years. He argues that the extension is necessary to ensure a steady flow of men into the armed forces.

The President's message also asks for an increase in the number of registrants. He notes that the number of registrants has not increased as rapidly as he had hoped.

The President's message is likely to be well received by Congress. The Selective Service Act is popular and has been widely supported by the public.

The extension of the Selective Service Act is expected to be approved by Congress. The act is necessary to ensure a steady flow of men into the armed forces and to provide for the induction of all eligible men.

THE CLASS CONSCIOUS T. R.

By Victor L. Bogard

LAST Monday President Roosevelt again sent a message to Congress asking for an extension of the Selective Service Act. The message was received by the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The Selective Service Act is designed to provide for the induction of young men into the armed forces of the United States. The act was passed by Congress in 1917 and has been in effect ever since.

The act provides for the registration of all men between the ages of 18 and 45 who are not exempt from induction. The registration is done under the supervision of local boards of registrars appointed by the President.

The Selective Service Act was originally intended to last for a period of one year. However, it has been extended several times, the latest extension being for a period of two years.

The President's message asks for an extension of the Selective Service Act for another two years. He argues that the extension is necessary to ensure a steady flow of men into the armed forces.

The President's message also asks for an increase in the number of registrants. He notes that the number of registrants has not increased as rapidly as he had hoped.

The President's message is likely to be well received by Congress. The Selective Service Act is popular and has been widely supported by the public.

The extension of the Selective Service Act is expected to be approved by Congress. The act is necessary to ensure a steady flow of men into the armed forces and to provide for the induction of all eligible men.

THE CLASS CONSCIOUS T. R.

By Victor L. Bogard

LAST Monday President Roosevelt again sent a message to Congress asking for an extension of the Selective Service Act. The message was received by the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The Selective Service Act is designed to provide for the induction of young men into the armed forces of the United States. The act was passed by Congress in 1917 and has been in effect ever since.

The act provides for the registration of all men between the ages of 18 and 45 who are not exempt from induction. The registration is done under the supervision of local boards of registrars appointed by the President.

The Selective Service Act was originally intended to last for a period of one year. However, it has been extended several times, the latest extension being for a period of two years.

The President's message asks for an extension of the Selective Service Act for another two years. He argues that the extension is necessary to ensure a steady flow of men into the armed forces.

The President's message also asks for an increase in the number of registrants. He notes that the number of registrants has not increased as rapidly as he had hoped.

The President's message is likely to be well received by Congress. The Selective Service Act is popular and has been widely supported by the public.

The extension of the Selective Service Act is expected to be approved by Congress. The act is necessary to ensure a steady flow of men into the armed forces and to provide for the induction of all eligible men.

THE CLASS CONSCIOUS T. R.

By Victor L. Bogard

LAST Monday President Roosevelt again sent a message to Congress asking for an extension of the Selective Service Act. The message was received by the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The Selective Service Act is designed to provide for the induction of young men into the armed forces of the United States. The act was passed by Congress in 1917 and has been in effect ever since.

The act provides for the registration of all men between the ages of 18 and 45 who are not exempt from induction. The registration is done under the supervision of local boards of registrars appointed by the President.

The Selective Service Act was originally intended to last for a period of one year. However, it has been extended several times, the latest extension being for a period of two years.

The President's message asks for an extension of the Selective Service Act for another two years. He argues that the extension is necessary to ensure a steady flow of men into the armed forces.

The President's message also asks for an increase in the number of registrants. He notes that the number of registrants has not increased as rapidly as he had hoped.

The President's message is likely to be well received by Congress. The Selective Service Act is popular and has been widely supported by the public.

The extension of the Selective Service Act is expected to be approved by Congress. The act is necessary to ensure a steady flow of men into the armed forces and to provide for the induction of all eligible men.

THE CLASS CONSCIOUS T. R.

By Victor L. Bogard

LAST Monday President Roosevelt again sent a message to Congress asking for an extension of the Selective Service Act. The message was received by the Senate and the House of Representatives.

The Selective Service Act is designed to provide for the induction of young men into the armed forces of the United States. The act was passed by Congress in 1917 and has been in effect ever since.

The act provides for the registration of all men between the ages of 18 and 45 who are not exempt from induction. The registration is done under the supervision of local boards of registrars appointed by the President.

The Selective Service Act was originally intended to last for a period of one year. However, it has been extended several times, the latest extension being for a period of two years.

The President's message asks for an extension of the Selective Service Act for another two years. He argues that the extension is necessary to ensure a steady flow of men into the armed forces.

The President's message also asks for an increase in the number of registrants. He notes that the number of registrants has not increased as rapidly as he had hoped.

The President's message is likely to be well received by Congress. The Selective Service Act is popular and has been widely supported by the public.

The extension of the Selective Service Act is expected to be approved by Congress. The act is necessary to ensure a steady flow of men into the armed forces and to provide for the induction of all eligible men.

THE CLASS CONSCIOUS T. R.

By Victor L. Bogard

LAST Monday President Roosevelt again sent a message to Congress asking for an extension of the Selective Service Act. The message was received by the Senate and the House of Representatives.
At the Theaters

The current exhibition of the art of the stage, which seems to have grown up to the requirements of the time, is the result of a concatenation of circumstances, and it is only logical that the season of the year is one of the factors that have contributed to its existence. Theatrical performances are not only a reflection of the political and social conditions of the nation, but they are also a means of communicating ideas and values to the public.

At the present time, the United States is going through a period of great change and transition. The economic conditions are unstable, and the political climate is fraught with uncertainty. The theaters are not immune to these changes, and they are adapting to the new circumstances in their own way.

Theaters are not only places for entertainment, but they are also a microcosm of the society in which they operate. They reflect the values, beliefs, and attitudes of the people who frequent them. The plays that are performed, the audiences that attend them, and the discussions that follow are all part of the larger conversation that is taking place in the world.

Theatrical performances are a means of creating and exploring new ideas, and they can be a powerful tool for social change. By presenting stories that resonate with the audience, theaters can help to create a sense of community and foster a shared understanding of the world.

In conclusion, the current exhibition of the art of the stage is a reflection of the times we live in. It is a testament to the resilience and adaptability of human creativity, and it is a reminder of the importance of art in our lives. As we continue to navigate through these uncertain times, let us remember that theater can be a powerful force for good, and that it has the potential to bring us together in ways that are both powerful and necessary.