No Course But to Fight

By Allan L. Benson

O men who work and are persecuted for the sake of a righteous cause, and who suffer upon the altar of progress and humanity—great God! the time has come when you must be united to fight for your rights. You are being oppressed, you are being denied the free exercise of your rights. You are being denied the right to speak and think as you please. You are being denied the right to organize and labor for a better life.

And so the time has come when you must be united to fight. You must be united to fight for your rights, and for the rights of all who are oppressed and persecuted for the sake of a righteous cause.

Let us be united to fight for our rights, and for the rights of all who are oppressed and persecuted for the sake of a righteous cause.

Because the time has come when we must be united to fight for our rights, and for the rights of all who are oppressed and persecuted for the sake of a righteous cause.

Why Should Women Vote For Bryan?

By Victor L. Berger

I am not going to answer the Gompersians about the question of whether women should vote for Bryan or not. I am sure that he, as a political leader, can answer that question for himself. But I do want to say that women should vote for Bryan because he is the only candidate who can save the United States.

The United States is in a state of crisis. The country is in a state of bankruptcy. The people are starving. The government is bankrupt. The country is on the verge of revolution. Only a man who is completely honest and pure can save the United States.

And Bryan is that man. He is honest and pure. He is a man who can save the United States.

Because of all this, I say that women should vote for Bryan. He is the only candidate who can save the United States.
American Labor’s Earliest History

Unions were at first called Lodges of Perfection. The first were organized in the eastern states around 1797. These lodges were devoted to the labor of the skilled trades. They were formed to protect the interests of the members of the trade and to resist the efforts of non-members to enter the craft. The lodges had strict rules and regulations, and members were required to adhere to them. The lodges were not political organizations, but they did have a social and economic purpose.

The American Labor Party was formed in 1869, and its principal objective was to secure the enfranchisement of the colored race. It was organized on the same principles as the political parties of England, France, and Italy. The party was called the American Labor Party, and its aim was to secure the right of the working man to vote, and to provide for his moral and physical welfare.

CAPITALISM'S CONFESSION—By Ben Hanford

The strong man fights fair. He relies on his strength to win. The man with a riptide fights fair. He relies on his cunning to win. The brave man fights fair. He would rather lose than wither than fight dirty.

Confrontations, seductions, men with a chips on their shoulders are ready to look at any situation in a light that is shining on the back. The moment the man with a chubby chin appears on the scene, any cut-throat or any bully will surround him. Men are warlike, and when we are not ready to fight in a fair manner, they become war-hawks, and will lead any national, or any individual, to the warpath.

We have a capitalistic society, a society where a man who fights dirty is the only man who wins. We have a country where a man who fights dirty is the only man who wins. We have a society where a man who fights dirty is the only man who wins.

We are being led by men who are ready to fight dirty. We are being led by men who are ready to fight dirty. We are being led by men who are ready to fight dirty.

The Making of the Criminal.

By Louis L. Ledbetter

Wednesday, May 30th, 1935

There were two men in the room, the railroad tracks and the wall. The man on the railroad tracks was the criminal. The man near the wall was the detective.

The detective, silent and gray, stepped out of the side-room and walked down the platform. He had beenying outside the window, watching the man on the tracks. He was an experienced detective, and he knew what he was looking for.

"How is the doctor?" he asked, his voice barely audible.

"He's taking care of the man," replied the man near the wall.

The doctor, he had been told, was a man of great knowledge and experience. He knew what to do in these cases. He knew how to keep the criminal from escaping.

"What's the time?" asked the detective.

"It's six o'clock," replied the man near the wall.

The detective looked at his watch. He was ready to leave. He knew that the criminal would try to escape at six. He was ready to stop him.

"I'll be right back," he said, and he walked out of the room.

The man on the railroad tracks was still there. He was alone. He was a lonely man, and he knew that he was in trouble. He knew that the detective would come for him.

"I'm going to take my chance," he thought. "I'm not going to let him catch me." He started to run.

The detective ran after him, but he was too slow. The criminal was already out of sight.

"I'll get him next time," thought the detective. "It was a close call. But I'll get him next time." He walked back into the room, and he sat down.

The man near the wall watched him. He knew that the detective was a man of great determination. He knew that he would never give up.

"I'll be back," he thought. "I'll catch that criminal. I'll make sure that he never escapes again." He sat down, too, and he waited for the detective to come back.
