Are the English Slower than the Americans? Hardly! By Victor L. Berger

During the last several years they have had a great deal said about the Socialistic legislation of Great Britain. However, the English, of course, were not levied by a parliament in which the Members were chosen by the people. It was introduced by a Liberal minority and carried through by a parliament in which the people did not have a voice.

To understand the situation, we must bear in mind that the radical financial legislation is not yet possible in England, or in any other country of the world. There is an incredible number of obstacles, as in Germany; nor is there a House of Commons which the people have the right to acquire, much less to change. If the English House of Lords has nothing to say about the budget, it has nothing to say about the money. Furthermore, the King has no veto rights nor is he the president of the parliament. Furthermore, the government is responsible for the budget.

And last but not least—there is no "supreme court" which can declare any legislation unconstitutional.

As a matter of fact, England has no written constitution. The decisions of the English parliament are the law of the land. And it has been said that the English parliament can pass any law on all sorts of things except to tax a woman.

The English House of Commons is simply all-powerful in matters of taxation. And just now, an English liberal government—very liberal, I might say—has found a majority for spending over $100,000,000 a year out of the wealth of England.

Please compare this with the actions of our congress, and try to comprehend how our policy is at variance with the English.

And then point out the decisions of the Supreme Court on the tax question, which show the English House of Lords, etc., to what extent our constitution is a farce. And also compare with the English procedures the present wrangling in Congress over the Senate and House differences, which is a collection of all the disagreements between the states.

And also explain to the English how an English citizens can make a collection of the entire additional taxation upon the shoulder of the people by himself. And how the English Parliament can pass a law to tax 25% of the wealth of England. Then tell him that the last 10 years should not be on the poor people also.

The English government required a majority of about one vote in the House of Commons to pass any law.

And of these ten days half came from the representatives of the Labor party, which is the most important party in England. About 100 members of the Labour party voted with the Con servatives.

But the House of Commons in England is probably more communist than any other country we have in our states.

And let us point out the tremendous load that was put on the English by the war.

We can point the English to their back to William the Conqueror, the Norman invasion, and the subsequent domination, when England was all divided up between the French and the English. And the condition has prevailed there ever since.

There was a sort of restoration in a way when the duties on European goods were put in the hands of the people. But what is interesting is that the wealth of England is probably more than that of any other country we have in our states.

The English, as we know, have to work harder for less goods than we do, and they have to work, for instance, the Duke of Westminster owns several square miles of land that is sold for very cheap.

Although we have no sale of any kind in the USA.

And let us bring in the new 48 states and the English in the last 100 years. The English have never been able to tax themselves in any way.

And let us compare with the English how our states are conducted by the Communist party.

And let us point out to the English how the English have never been able to tax themselves in any way.

And let us show the people of the English how our states are conducted by the Communist party.

The Materialistic Motive

"Have you ever seen a man who was not materialistic?", asked President Lincoln. "I know of one, and he was a great man."

The truth is, materialism is everywhere. It has come to dominate our society, and it is a force that we must confront if we are to achieve a better world.

First, let us consider the root cause of materialism. It is the belief that material possessions are the key to happiness and success. This belief is widespread, and it is fueled by the promises of consumerism and the media.

Second, let us consider the consequences of materialism. It leads to greed, envy, and selfishness. It encourages us to focus on our own needs and desires, rather than on the needs and desires of others.

Finally, let us consider the solution to materialism. It is to cultivate a deeper sense of spirituality and compassion. By focusing on our spiritual and emotional well-being, we can begin to break free from the grip of materialism.

In conclusion, materialism is a pervasive force in our society. It is up to us to recognize its power and to resist it, so that we can create a more just and equitable world.

The Common Good

"The Common Good" is a book by Robert challenges our 20th century perspective. It argues that the common good is not just a matter of economic productivity, but also of social cohesion, political stability, and cultural diversity.

Gandhi and other modern figures have made the"Common Good" concept famous, but the idea is not new. The ancient Greeks argued for the"Common Good", and the medieval Church taught us about the"Common Good" as well.

In"The Common Good", Gandhi challenges the individualism of his time, and argues for the"Common Good" as the foundation of a just society.

The book is a must-read for anyone interested in social justice, politics, and the humanities.

The Wind and the Moon—A Political Medley

Adapted by ROBERT HUNTER from the writings of THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Outgoing for the R66L—OUTLOOK please remember.

It is always difficult to determine just what position one is in when the wind is blowing hard and the moon is rising. You have so many conflicting suggestions about what the weather is going to be like that there is almost no sure way of determining it.

Like a ghost in a dream I stumble through the night,
Always looking what I am about,
Sometimes it seems I am a part of the dream,
And often I am not sure if I am awake or not.

The Moon blew hard, and out went the "Meck.
No sleep.

Doomed to climb, climb, climb.

Doomed to climb, climb, climb.

Doomed to climb, climb, climb.

Doomed to climb, climb, climb.

Doomed to climb, climb, climb.

Doomed to climb, climb, climb.

Doomed to climb, climb, climb.

Doomed to climb, climb, climb.

If only I could change my position so that I might be able to see what is going on,
I might then be able to judge whether or not I am making any progress.

The Moon blew hard, and the wind howled, and the world went on.

A Story, a Moral, and the Facts for Business Men and Their Bookkeepers

Here's how a boy once "forced a balance":
He had some girth in the bottom end of a sack; and, to balance it across his shoulder, carried a stone at the other end.

He could have divided his girth, and made half in one end of the sack balance half in the other end.

But he said: "This way was good enough for Dad an' Gran'dad. So it's good enough for me."

And there are a few business men who, in some things, are just about as logical.

For instance:

In some offices the clerks and bookkeepers are still doing the adding-work "by hand", with pencil and paper.

We're told they've "always done" it that way. "That's what they're there for. And what's the use of putting in a machine to do what bookkeepers and clerks are paid for doing?"

Maybe a business man can get along without an adding machine: without a Burroughs. Business men could get long without the Chicago-New York 18-hour limited. There are 30-hour trains.

But, forgetting all prejudice, all foregone conclusions, and looking at the facts fairly and squarely in the fact, we find:

That, while bookkeepers and clerks can get their work out without the help of a Burroughs, they do it by much overtime, overwork, overworry.

Because they make many mistakes in their additions, however good at figure.

It takes "overtime" to find these mistakes.

Thus, postage, balances, reports, statements, are always "behind".

Moreover, because of this afloat-work, the men came to each morning with heads fagged and begoggled by yesterday's figures.
