The Tide at the Flood—By John M. Work

Interesting audience which I had in a place a few days ago was Robert M. La Follette. He was there by request of a large group of people who are interested in the political situation. He was at the same time speaking on the trends of the party and the probable course of the future political movement.

La Follette is an able and interesting speaker. He has a great deal of knowledge of the political situation, and he is able to express it in a clear and concise manner. He is a strong advocate of the free election, and he is always ready to defend the principles of democracy.

The audience was a large one, and it was greatly interested in what La Follette had to say. He was received with loud applause, and the audience was evidently pleased with what he had to say.

Non-Partisan City Markets

The latest discovery of the "non-partisan" relates to municipal market projects. There are several cities in the world where a municipal market properly planned over the whole area of the city has been established. And the National Farmer's Gold Oranges has just completed the construction of the first such market in Wisconsin, called the Milwaukee South side Market. It is the largest and most complete of its kind in the United States.

The market is located at 1000 W. Wisconsin Ave. and 7th St., and covers an area of 2 acres. It has 150 stalls and is open daily from 6 a.m. to 9 p.m. The market is operated by the Milwaukee South side Market Co., a cooperative organization of farmers and fruit growers from the surrounding area.

The market offers a wide variety of fresh produce, including fruits and vegetables, as well as live poultry. It is a popular destination for locals and tourists alike, and has become a symbol of the city's commitment to supporting local farmers and promoting healthy eating.

Traffic Conditions and Street Railway Operation

Street cars must run when the people want to ride, and must go as far as the greatest number of people want to go. This represents the fundamental principle of a street railway company's duty to the public.

Expressed therein, in broad terms, the rule seems simple. In practice, it is so complex that no company could meet its full requirements. Still, it constitutes the one great law by which THE MILWAUKEE ELECTRIC LIGHT AND COMPANY is governed in all of its work pertaining to the operation of its system.

Physically, persons must actually use the street railways to travel. And the rail company must arrange its services so that the traffic will be handled in the most efficient manner possible.

Peaonage in America—Three Months for Murder
Men, Refusing to Work, Deprived of Liberty and Fed on Bread and Water Until They Yielded

Washington, Aug. 15—The labor movement in America, to be more effective, must be sponsored by the government. An investigation of the alleged peonage of men on Southern railroads, made by the Department of Labor, revealed that, as a matter of fact, the government had been neglecting its duty for the past three years. The investigation disclosed that many of the men, who had been forced to work under the system of peonage, were actually slavery. It was found that the government had been neglecting its duty in dealing with the matter of the peonage of men in the past three years. In one case a railroad company, to save money and not to advertise its own system of peonage, had actually advertised its own system of peonage. In another case, the government had neglected to make any attempt to prevent the peonage of men. In the third case, the government had neglected to take any action to prevent the peonage of men. The government had neglected to take any action to prevent the peonage of men.
