"The fight is on! We are determined to win our gigantic Anti-Trust fight. The movement has made overwhelming odds. We will not give in to the great trusts. We do not say that the trusts is the question, but we do know that if we keep our system of cooperation going, our monopolies and price-setting contracts are very, very weak.

Lesson Learned from a Spider

Many useful lessons can be learned by observing the behavior of the spider. In its web, the spider has a system of traplines, which are used to catch its prey. These traplines are made of silk threads, which are stretched out like threads of a web. The spider is able to detect the presence of an insect by the way the threads of the web vibrate. When it detects the presence of an insect, it sends signals to its brain, which causes it to move to the center of the web and to catch the insect. This is a valuable lesson for anyone who wants to learn how to catch an insect.
