A Sketch of the Marx International and Its Struggle with the Direct Actionists—

Written by J. Calkins, M.P.

The International, whose name is the source of its Internationalness, is a world-wide organization, with its headquarters in London, England. The organization was founded in 1864 by a group of revolutionaries who had fled from Europe to escape the persecutions of the authorities. The organization was the result of a combination of various smaller groups, each with its own particular emphasis and goals. The International was formed to provide a platform for the exchange of ideas and the coordination of activities among the various revolutionary groups around the world. It was a place where revolutionaries from different parts of the world could come together to discuss and plan strategies for revolutionary action.

The International was a loose federation of local groups, with no central authority. It was organized on a democratic basis, with each group having a say in the decisions of the organization. The organization was known for its radical ideas and its support of direct action, which meant that it believed in using violent means to achieve its goals. The International was a major influence on the development of the modern socialist movement, and it has had a lasting impact on the history of the world.
KARL MARX, A SCIENTIFIC PROPHET Written for The Herald by Ernst Untermeier, Translator of Marx "Capital"

PROPHETS are a much abused and misunderstood term. In the hands of unscrupulous charlatans and fake religious leaders, it has become the durchgang's stock phrase in the world. Unless considered with proper understanding, the term is almost a synonym for the terms "criminal" and "impostor." But nothing could be further from the truth. A prophet in the true sense is a person who has reached the understanding and vision of man and natural phenomena, and who has the ability to express this vision in a way that is comprehensible to others.

The term "prophet" is often misused to refer to anyone who predicts future events, regardless of whether they are based on a solid understanding of the underlying causes or not. This is not the case with Karl Marx. His predictions were based on a deep understanding of the social, economic, and political forces that shape human lives, and his vision of the future was grounded in the principles of science and reason.

Marx's predictions were not just about the future of individuals, but about the future of society as a whole.
He saw the资本主义 system as an inherently unstable and impossible system to introduce the ideas of class struggle and the need for a revolutionary transformation of society.

In the end, Marx's vision proved to be correct. His predictions about the nature of capitalism and the need for a transformation of society were borne out by events.

Our task today is not only to remember Karl Marx as the great prophet he was, but to continue to build on his ideas and to work towards the realization of a society where the needs of people are put above the profits of capitalists.
