ROOSEVELT PROTECTS FLEECE

The President Roosevelt, director of the Employment Service in the United States, has been accused of favoring the interests of big business by the labor unions. A railroad magnate has threatened to leave the country if the President does not approve of his proposed legislation. But it is generally believed that the President will not act without his own personal interest being considered. The magnate, who has been active in politics and who is now seeking to become a candidate for the Presidency, has been a powerful influence in the administration. His influence has been so great that the President has been forced to make some concessions to the railroad magnate. This has led to a conflict between the President and the labor unions, who feel that the President is not doing enough to protect the interests of the workers.
