Eugene V. Debs' Address at The Nineteenth Century Club

In my early years I stood before the open door of a blazing furnace and learned how to speed a locomotive along the iron track of progress and civilization. Standing there, I learned that by no means would men ever dare to turn away from that iron track or work for any other road than that which is paved with the dead level of industrial service.

It is therefore with the economic system, which is responsible for not only private labor, but for all organized labor, that we must deal first. For if organized labor is not the五一节 labor problem or any other at the root of all the selfish influences.

From the earliest ages there has been a prison problem. The ancient Romans, as we know, had their dungeons. Most of the pioneers in the field of labor, the levers of liberty, whose names are revered in every corner of the world, made such institutions a focal point in their day. But civilization advances, however slowly, and there has been some progress.

And yet this same system is still with us, and the problem remains.

In the earlier days punishment was simple—imprisonment. Officers went about the streets, looking for thieves, and frequently found them, and then they threw them into the jail to await their trial in the inquisitorial room of the olden days.

It was at this point that the convict system was born. It became steadily expanded from that time on. Inmates of the prison wall, not only the men who have been on parole or have escaped from the jail, but the men who have been in reformatories, were all now to be considered as an integral part of the criminal system, a system that is now a part of the society in which we live.

More than thirty years ago, Prof. E. V. Smith, then commissioner of the Prison Association of New York, made a report to the legislature of the state on prison industry in the United States.

Upon the whole, it is settled that a certain amount of the work of convict labor is valuable. The value of the work done by the convict has been estimated at various times and places. The value of the work has been estimated at various times and places.

The epidemic of thirty years has not been entirely overcome. It is true now as it was then. Unemployable labor is not the only cause of penal servitude. It is the cause of all labor, but it is the cause of a number of other evils that are not quite so evident.

The most noticeable feature of prison labor is its greatly uneven character. We can see that the work is not equally distributed among the prisoners, that the employment is not equally distributed among the prisoners.

It is important to note that society and the state should endeavor to make the classes of society that are not able to work and make an honest living.

It is possible to say that society and the state should endeavor to make the classes of society that are not able to work and make an honest living.

It is a matter of regret that the classes of society that are not able to work and make an honest living.

The commission, which investigated the matter in Ohio in 1877, said that the system of prison labor was not a just one.

Social Democratic Party Platform

The Social Democratic Party of America declares that life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness are the birthright of mankind. Child is conditioned upon equal opportunity and safeguards. Those privati¢ership of the means of production and distribution of the general product of the nation’s labor, be they trusts or other syndicates of capitalists or exploiters of the labor of the working class, are deprived of the socially necessary utilities for the common good and wiser, and will result in the destruction of civilization.

The trade union movement and political activity of the Social Democratic Party of America are the chief organizing factors of the working class, the one representing the economic interests of the working class, and the other cooperation in the international solidarity of the working class. The Social Democratic Party of America declares its object to be the establishment of a system of political parties and distribution, to be administered by the organized political parties in the name of the working class of America, in the name of international socialism, on the basis of universal suffrage.

The wage-workers and all those in the same economic position shall realize a higher civilization which would secure competition with all capitalistic剥削 as a result of the Social Democratic Party of America. The control of political power by the wage-workers will be the direct result of the abolition of capitalism and of all class rules.

The nationalization of grain elevators, railroads, coal and other storage facilities, will be used to be the farmers, at cost.

The Social Democratic Party Platform also includes positions on public utilities, such as electric, gas, and water, and public policies related to these industries. The platform calls for the expansion of labor and political rights for women and men, and the abolition of all laws that discriminate against women.

The platform also addresses the role of the Social Democratic Party in American politics, including its role in challenging the Democratic and Republican parties and advocating for a new political party that represents the interests of the working class. The platform calls for a social democratic transformation of American society, with a focus on economic justice, civil rights, and international solidarity.

The Social Democratic Party Platform is a bold call to action for a radical change in American politics and society, and it remains a powerful statement of the political aspirations of the working class today.
Socialism in Massachusetts

Chairman M. J. O'Malley's letter in the Appeal of this week, on "The Case of Labour" and the "Laws of Capital," is a contribution to the Socialistic literature of the country. The writer is somewhat doubtful whether the 'most industrial workers' have, as yet, given the Socialism of M. J. O'Malley any serious consideration. With his usual ability, and with a most earnest spirit, he has undertaken to show the insufficiency of the economic claims of Socialism and the problems of the industrial worker for the solution of the social system.

SOCIICAL DEVELOPMENT.

In his work on the "Development of Socialism from Utopia to Communism," I have endeavored to unfold the course of the class struggle as several successive stages and to delineate the gradual development of production in the history of the human race.

1. MEDIEVAL SOCIETY—Small proprietors, under the domination of religious and feudal principles, adopted individual production of property, land, and patrimony, and dwelt in their results. Production for the immediate needs of the household, the production of one's bread, the production of property, and the product of its own hands, were consumed by the household, and fell into exchange.
The production of "commodity" is the first step in the development of productive forces; and it contains in embryo the assuagement of want, the exchange of the product of labor, and the transition to the alienation of products.

2. CAPITLALIST REVOLUTION—Capital, created ex post, through simple co-operation and exchange, capital, the hitherto scattered nomads of production, in large workshops, and thereby, their transformation from individual to social production, in a transitional form.

This is the fundamental contradiction of the social relation, of production in general, and of the social relation in which society presents itself as the group of individuals whose production is carried on in a social form.

The Associated Press has the following to say about the labor situation. One of the out of its power to help the great labor press of the country. These papers, started by turn, self-sacrificing and yearn to see your interest, your cause, at all times and under all circum-
