WHAT A SOCIALIST GOVERNOR COULD DO TOLD BY A SOCIALIST CANDIDATE

Single-Handed He Could Pave the Way for Massachusetts or Any Other State at Socialist Supremacy at the Ballot Box

This article, necessarily brief through space limitations, shows the possibilities of a mass Socialist government in the United States. The Socialists, after the death of Labor, would be in a position to attract the majority of the people, particularly the farmers, laborers, and employers, and to defeat their candidates. The issue, then, would be between the two parties, and the Socialists would get the victory. The Socialists would then have the power to make a new constitution, which would provide for a Socialist government.

The governor, in his absence, the affairs of government would remain in the hands of the executive department, with the advice of the council. The governor, with the advice of the council, might adjourn or prorogue (closed) the regular session of the legislature, at any time during the two houses, or call it in extraordinary session, if the advice of the council of the Commonwealth required it.

The governor, in his absence, would name a person to fill the vacancy in the place of a member of the legislature, until a successor could be elected.

The power of pardoning offenses, and granting reprieves and remissions of punishment, is vested in the governor. The governor, in the absence of the General Assembly, and in the exercise of this power, would be bound to observe the same rules and regulations as the legislature, and the regulations of the state would be equally applied.

In the case of a vacancy in the legislature, the governor would name a person to fill the vacancy in the place of a member of the legislature, until a successor could be elected. The governor would have the power to make appointments to positions in the executive department, and the governor would be bound to observe the same rules and regulations as the legislature, and the regulations of the state would be equally applied.

In the case of a vacancy in the legislature, the governor would name a person to fill the vacancy in the place of a member of the legislature, until a successor could be elected. The governor would have the power to make appointments to positions in the executive department, and the governor would be bound to observe the same rules and regulations as the legislature, and the regulations of the state would be equally applied.

In the case of a vacancy in the legislature, the governor would name a person to fill the vacancy in the place of a member of the legislature, until a successor could be elected. The governor would have the power to make appointments to positions in the executive department, and the governor would be bound to observe the same rules and regulations as the legislature, and the regulations of the state would be equally applied.