Jailed Jobless Leader Says
Must Build Southern Worker

From Harry Raymond, now in prison at Hart Island, N. Y., for capitalizing the demands of unemployed workers into the demonstration in Union Square last month, Mr. Raymond told a capitalistic and worker's meeting in the St. Paul, Minn., that the demonstration and the Astor Place riot, calling for greater support and holding of the SOUTHERN WORKER, were due to 'the lack of appreciation of trade unions and labor organizations by the public.'

The SOUTHERN WORKER has been a failure because of lack of appreciation of its efforts, Mr. Raymond said, and was due to 'the lack of appreciation of labor organizations and trade unions by the public.'

Mr. Raymond said he has been in prison for ten years and has been in and out of institutions for the past five years. He said he was in prison because of his work in organizing labor unions and trade unions, and has been in and out of institutions for the past five years.
