Harlan Miners Fight Rather Than Starve

In the coal fields of the United States, miners are waging a ceaseless struggle against oppression. There are 5,000 miners employed, yet two-thirds of them are working only one out of every five days. Those who do get work, earn only $1.25 a day. In the isolated mining towns, the situation is much worse. In Harlan, where the mines have been closed down for a year, the men are forced to live off whatever food can be scrounged. This situation has led to a general strike of the miners, who have called for a halt to all work in the mines.

Against this backdrop, there are 28 miners who refuse to accept the coal company's demands for a 50 percent reduction in wages. These miners have formed their own union, the United Miners Industrial Union. They have taken their case to the public, using the slogan, "All for the people who work for the rich, all for the rich who do not work for the people." The union has organized a series of rallies and protests, demanding fair wages and working conditions for all miners.

Organize Scottsboro Defense Committee!

The struggle for the rights of the miners is part of a larger movement for workers' rights across the nation. The Scottsboro Boys case, where nine young black men were wrongly accused of trafficking a white woman, has galvanized the labor movement and inspired a wave of solidarity among miners. The Scottsboro Defense Committee has been formed to ensure that the rights of all miners are protected.

Scoutsboro Conferences in 12 Cities

These conferences are being held in major cities across the country, including New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia. The conferences are being attended by thousands of miners, who are fighting for better wages, safer working conditions, and an end to the exploitation of the working class. The conferences have been called to discuss the strategies and tactics for winning the struggle against the coal company and the mine owners.

Harlan Miners Fight Against Starvation

The miners in Harlan are determined to continue their fight for better wages and working conditions. They are calling on the public to support their struggle by sending food and clothing to the miners in Harlan. The miners are also calling on the government to intervene and protect their rights.

In this struggle, we see the strength of the working class and the potential for a broader movement to be built. The miners in Harlan are leading the way, and their struggle is an inspiration to all workers fighting for a better life.
