Charlotte Scottsboro Meet Elects Five
recently from France, the delegates of the workers' organizations in the United States.

"The work that we did in France was very difficult," said one of the delegates. "We worked day and night. It was not easy. But we did it for the workers."

"And we won," said another. "We won for the workers."

"We want more," said yet another. "We want more for the workers."

"And we will get it," said the last. "We will get it for the workers."

The delegates embraced each other and went on their way, determined to fight for the workers' rights.

"We will not give up," said one of them. "We will not give up for the workers."

"And we will not give up," said another. "We will not give up for the workers."

"We will fight for the workers," said all. "We will fight for the workers."

The delegates walked away, their hearts full of determination and hope for the workers.

"We will not rest until we have won," said one of them. "We will not rest until we have won for the workers."

"And we will not rest," said another. "We will not rest for the workers."

"We will fight until we have won," said all. "We will fight until we have won for the workers."

The delegates embraced once more and went on their way, determined to fight for the workers' rights and never give up for the workers.
