BRITISH NAVY THREATENS MUTINY AGAINST WAGE CUTS

STOP NO. SEA PRACTICE AND SING RED FLAG

The British imperialist government, faced with a revolt against wage, reductions and miserable conditions, on the part of a large section of its bloody army, has had to postpone, for the first time in the nation's history, the celebration of the White Ensenade. The Makepeace government, by establishing strict censorship, has attempted to cover up the fact from the rest of the world, and particularly from other sections of the British navy. In foreign waters and the British army for fear they will be found in the fight against the government.

Following the revolt of the United Navy by less than two weeks, the action of the British naval forces, emphasized again the general futility and disorder existing in the fleet. The break in the British navy against the wage cuts accompanying the "Economic Ensenade" is completed. The insurrection proves that the naval revolution, at least partially, that the demoralization, is not only in the navy but in the manufacturing industry. The rebellion, if not a complete victory, is a definite victory for the workers' movement. The largest means that British imperialism can never again rest with the same confidence in the strength and solidarity of its armed forces. "The Red Flag" says, the British workers, workers from the dock to the battleship, replace "Britishism" with a real struggle against capital. There are no battles to be fought on the anniversary of the downfall of yesterday's day when the workers, the soldiers, the workers all united in a common fight against capital and for freedom. Instead of turning their guns against tillers of other countries instead of fighting against colonial masses, the arms that have been placed in the hands of these workers will be turned against their employers and the capitalist ruling class.
