HOW 'TS DONE IN WALL STREET

A STORY THAT THE CAPITALISTS PLEASURABLY SUGGESTED

Frank Compturer Way of "Doing Business"- Presidents and Directors Throwing Dice for the Right of Way That the Public Found No Event That Actually Took Place.

This is the story of the failure of the directors and the most promising director of the New York Stock Exchange, Frank Compturer. The story begins in the New York Stock Exchange, where a certain number of individuals were engaged in the business of making money. Among them was Frank Compturer, well-known for his skill in manipulating the market and for his success in the New York Stock Exchange. He was considered one of the most important figures in the business and was highly regarded by all who knew him.

The story continues with the description of how Compturer and the directors of the New York Stock Exchange, after a series of losses, decided to take a chance on a new venture. They invested a large sum of money in a new project, which was expected to be highly profitable. However, the project failed, and the directors had to face the consequences.

The story concludes with the description of how the public found no event that actually took place. Despite the failure of the project, the directors and Compturer continued to operate as if nothing had happened. They continued to make money and to influence the market in the way they had always done.

The story is a portrayal of the greed and corruption that was prevalent in the business at that time. It is a story that still resonates today, as the financial industry continues to be characterized by the same kind of behavior.

Their Definition, Formation, Operation, Effects on the Working and Middle Classes, and Remedy

The term "trust" can be defined as the legal or common-law arrangement whereby a person holds title to a property or business for the benefit of another person. This arrangement is typically used in the context of corporate or business entities, where one person, the "trustee," holds the property or business on behalf of another, the "beneficiary."

In the context of business, a trust is often used as a device to protect a company's assets, such as stocks, real estate, or other forms of property, from creditors or other third parties. Trusts can also be used to protect the assets of individuals, such as trusts established for the benefit of children or other family members.

The term "trust" can also refer to a trust in law, which is a legal relationship between a trustor (the person who creates the trust) and a trustee (the person who administers the trust for the benefit of one or more beneficiaries). Trusts are commonly used in estate planning to provide for the distribution of assets in a manner consistent with the trustor's wishes.

The effects of trusts on the working and middle classes can be complex and multifaceted. On one hand, trusts can provide a source of stability and predictability for individuals and families, particularly in the context of inheritance and estate planning. On the other hand, the use of trusts by corporations and wealthy individuals may have negative effects on competition and the ability of small businesses and workers to compete.

The remedy for trusts in this context is likely to involve regulatory and legislative changes aimed at ensuring that trusts are used in a manner consistent with the public interest. This may include measures to limit the extent to which trusts are used to evade taxes or manipulate the market, as well as measures to ensure that trusts are used to benefit the general public rather than just a select few.

The precise details of this remedy will depend on the specific circumstances and the goals of the regulatory or legislative changes. It may include measures such as increased transparency and reporting requirements, as well as penalties for those who use trusts in a manner inconsistent with the public interest.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT NOTES

The circulation department, accordingly, is beginning to show results, and we are advised that the subscription list has jumped to a figure that the manager of the department feels proud of. This is due to the high quality of the weekly paper and the fact that it is the only journal in the country that is publishing a weekly edition.
