WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE?

One often hears the question, "What is the difference between the "Socialist" and the "Social Democratic" parties?" This frequency of the question implies that the Socialist and the Social Democratic parties are often confused and that there is some difference between them which is not generally understood.

Socialists, of course, are the followers of the Social Democratic party in Great Britain and the United States. They are sometimes styled "the Socialist party" or the "Socialist Labor party." They are often represented by the name "Social Democratic Labor party."

The Social Democratic party has been in existence in the United States for over a century. It was founded in 1870 by a group of workers who were dissatisfied with the labor movement of the time. The party was originally called the "International Workingmen's Association," but it changed its name to "Social Democratic Labor party" in 1875.

The Social Democratic party has always been committed to the idea that the working class should have control over the means of production. This is why the party has been called "Socialist." The party has also been committed to the idea that the working class should have a say in the government. This is why the party has been called "Labor party."

When the Board of Aldermen of the city of New York had under consideration the question of a railroad tunnel under the North River, the Board brought up the question of the relation between railroad and tunnel. This was a little side play of the board for the benefit of the people, with whom their view would not be taken. The company was only glad of the opportunity to make the world believe that they were doing something for the people, and the people were glad to believe it.

The railroad company is not doing anything for the people, but what they are doing is to get rid of a competitor. PART I

Another aspect represents the downfall of the middle-class woman in this way: "Under the reign of Augustus, a woman could go to court with an attorney, and file a suit for a divorce. If a man married a woman of another social class, the law would punish the man with a certain amount of money; but if a woman married a man of a lower social class, she could not be punished."

The middle-class woman in those days had more legal rights and privileges than the working-class woman. However, the working-class woman was more independent and was less subject to the control of the middle-class man. The middle-class woman was more dependent on her husband and was less independent in her actions and decisions.

The working-class woman was more likely to be exploited and mistreated by her husband. The middle-class woman was more likely to be a companion and helper to her husband, and she was more likely to have a say in the decisions that were made in her household.

The working-class woman was more likely to be involved in the labor movement and was more likely to be active in social reform. The middle-class woman was more likely to be involved in the cultural and intellectual life of her time.

The working-class woman was more likely to be poor and was more likely to be forced to work in order to support herself and her family. The middle-class woman was more likely to be wealthy and was more likely to have the opportunity to enjoy leisure and recreation.

The working-class woman was more likely to be a worker and was more likely to be involved in the productive aspects of society. The middle-class woman was more likely to be a consumer and was more likely to be involved in the consumption aspects of society.

The working-class woman was more likely to be a member of a working-class community and was more likely to have a sense of solidarity with her fellow workers. The middle-class woman was more likely to be a member of a middle-class community and was more likely to have a sense of solidarity with her fellow citizens.

The working-class woman was more likely to be a victim of oppression and was more likely to be forced to struggle against the forces of exploitation and injustice. The middle-class woman was more likely to be a beneficiary of the privileges and advantages of her class and was more likely to have a sense of security and stability.

The working-class woman was more likely to be a victim of social and political oppression and was more likely to be forced to struggle against the forces of reform and revolution. The middle-class woman was more likely to be a beneficiary of the reforms and revolutions of her time and was more likely to have a sense of progress and achievement.

The working-class woman was more likely to be a victim of the negative aspects of industrialization and modernization and was more likely to have a sense of alienation and dislocation. The middle-class woman was more likely to be a beneficiary of the positive aspects of industrialization and modernization and was more likely to have a sense of fulfillment and satisfaction.

The working-class woman was more likely to be a victim of the negative aspects of capitalist society and was more likely to have a sense of exploitation and degradation. The middle-class woman was more likely to be a beneficiary of the positive aspects of capitalist society and was more likely to have a sense of prosperity and progress.

The working-class woman was more likely to be a victim of the negative aspects of the educational system and was more likely to have a sense of ignorance and illiteracy. The middle-class woman was more likely to be a beneficiary of the positive aspects of the educational system and was more likely to have a sense of knowledge and culture.

The working-class woman was more likely to be a victim of the negative aspects of the political system and was more likely to have a sense of powerlessness and impotence. The middle-class woman was more likely to be a beneficiary of the positive aspects of the political system and was more likely to have a sense of power and influence.

The working-class woman was more likely to be a victim of the negative aspects of the social system and was more likely to have a sense of oppression and alienation. The middle-class woman was more likely to be a beneficiary of the positive aspects of the social system and was more likely to have a sense of security and stability.

The working-class woman was more likely to be a victim of the negative aspects of the economic system and was more likely to have a sense of poverty and insecurity. The middle-class woman was more likely to be a beneficiary of the positive aspects of the economic system and was more likely to have a sense of prosperity and progress.
THE MODERN MACEDON

Macedonia, or Thrace of Greece, is an area of transition between the Balkans and the Greek mainland. It was once a part of the Roman Empire, and later became part of the Ottoman Empire. The region has a rich cultural history, with evidence of human settlement dating back thousands of years. Today, Macedonia is a province of the Republic of North Macedonia, located in southeastern Europe.

The people of Macedonia are a mixture of different ethnic groups, including Macedonians, Greeks, Turks, and Bulgarians. The language spoken in Macedonia is Macedonian, which is a South Slavic language.

The region has a temperate climate, with mild winters and hot summers. The landscape is predominantly mountainous, with the highest peak being Vodno Mountain, which rises to 1,168 meters above sea level.

Macedonia is home to a variety of natural resources, including forests, mineral deposits, and agricultural land. The main economic activities in Macedonia include agriculture, forestry, and tourism.

In recent years, Macedonia has been facing political and social challenges, including ethnic tensions and conflicts. The country has also been dealing with issues related to immigration and integration.

The modern Macedonia is a complex and diverse region with a rich cultural heritage and a promising future.

America's Political Battles.

To the Daily and Weekly People—

June 7, 1917.

Mr. Sigel,

I am deeply interested in the political situation in America today. For this reason, I agree with the political ideas expressed in your newspaper, which, however, when you read them in a quiet room, you will find that they are full of sense and sound.

I have read all of your articles and articles by the same author in the last periodical, and I am convinced that you are a true friend of the nation. I hope to meet you in person at the next meeting of the Social Democratic Party.

Yours sincerely, visitors ask whether it would not be possible for them not to agree with us, instead of our being asked to agree with them, as they are used to doing. The committee reported that the question of the publication of the OHIO S. L. P. is under consideration. Various devices, which have been tried and found effective by various members of the State committee, are recommended for the solution of the problem. The motion was adopted without a dissenting vote.

The meeting was adjourned. All members present expressed their appreciation of the work of the committee and of the work of the State committee. The meeting was adjourned at 9:30 p.m.

Any One's Wheat Price?

A. T. Morgan, a member of the State committee, wrote the following letter to the editor of the OHIO S. L. P.:

Dear Sir:

I trust you will be able to find a way to get a more reasonable price for wheat. The wheat is now going at a higher price than the best farmers can get for it. It seems to me that the farmers should be able to get a fair price for their wheat, but I do not know how they are going to do it.

A. T. Morgan.

Mrs. C. A. Anthony, Canton, Ohio, was present.
