Story of the Subway Strike

The statement made at a recent meeting of the Central Federation of Union (the C. F. U.) by the delegates of the Italian Federation that there are 300 men of their race who are still suffering from the effects of the strike, and that they are in their wages, on some of the stock of the Rapid Transit Subway Company, was made in order to convince those who are interested in the matter, that the strike was not a mere labor disturbance, but a struggle for the rights of the Italian workers. It is a struggle which, except for the unions making the demands, would have been fought in the courts, and which is being fought with the active support of the Italian Federation, and with the help of the Italian workers. The strike is a battle for the preservation of the rights of the Italian workers, and it is a battle which must be fought, if those rights are to be preserved.

The strike is not a strike for the individual worker, but for the Italian workers as a whole. It is a strike for the preservation of the rights of the Italian workers as a whole. It is a strike for the preservation of the rights of the Italian workers as a whole.

OFF-HAND ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENCE

J. S. D., SACRAMENTO, CAL.

It's true that our general delivery has been returned.

E. T. L., TROY, N.Y.—The aim of many of these paintings is to make them more interesting to the public. We do not think they are likely to sell for a high price. In any case, the works should be shown in the best possible manner.
