SHOEMAKER OF CHICAGO MANIFESTO SPEAKS ON INDUSTRIAL UNIONISM

Some Concerns' American Federation of Labor will be on the hustings this coming spring, with a campaign designed, so the leaders say, to push the American labor movement in the direction of a new era in the labor movement's history. The purpose of the campaign is to spread the gospel of American Federationism and to strengthen the ranks of labor by increasing the number of workers who belong to unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

The campaign will be conducted in various parts of the country, with the aim of attracting new members to the unions and of increasing the solidarity of the workers. The leaders of the campaign believe that the spread of American Federationism will help to bring about a more equitable distribution of wealth and to improve the living standards of workers throughout the country. The Revolution in Russia

By Alexander Berkman

During the World War, Russia was convinced that it was on the threshold of a new era of peace and prosperity. But the war ended without bringing peace or prosperity. The revolution broke out in the midst of economic chaos and social upheaval. The Tsar, having lost the support of his army, was forced to abdicate. The provisional government, which was set up to replace the Tsar, was soon overthrown by a socialist revolution. The new government, the Soviet of Workers' and Soldiers' Deputies, took control of the country. It nationalized the banks, factories, and railroads, and established a system of workers' control. The revolution spread throughout the country, and the Soviet government was able to establish control over most of the country. However, the revolution was not able to bring about a lasting peace or prosperity. The White Russian army, supported by the Germans, fought against the Bolsheviks, and the civil war dragged on for several years. The revolution was ultimately successful, but it was not without代价. The Soviet government had to make many concessions to the Western powers in order to secure their support. The revolution was a turning point in history, and it laid the foundations for the Soviet Union, which would exist for more than 60 years.
