Socialism Necessary

Why Governmentally Palliated Capitalism Will Not Succeed

(From the Elizabeth, Scotl., "Socialist"

The utter necessity of attempting to effect a settlement of the industrial problems by reforming capitalist society, with its attendant political expedients, is clearly demonstrated during a debate in the Boston Socialists at their recent anniversary. The discussion centered around the question of whether, by forming labor organizations in the industrial field and by making the workers conscious of the need for such organizations, any valuable results could be attained. But the six thousand odd members of labor organizations were placed in charge of the affairs of the employer. This has been a very important factor in the development that has been open. Hadly any mass movement is so skillful as the trade union movement in organizing the workers, as the Federal Government has been doing. In fact, the government has been an active supporter of the labor movement, and the labor movement has been a valuable asset. And while the government has done a great deal in the way of promoting labor, there is only ONE REMEDY.

The whole thing is allowed to remain as it is.

Second—That a Bill be passed in Congress to provide for the home consumption of the working classes, the free trade of the home market, and the employment of labor on a scale sufficient to provide the children with food and clothing.

The position would then be that the government would be still in the hands of the capitalists. The only method of producing wealth would remain the same, and the working class would wage as frantically as ever. The position of the workers would remain as it is, without wages, without rights, and with only the most elementary rights to look forward to. The measure of improvement which the government could effect, the spirit in the direction of a capitalist system, and the conditions of the working class, is now at its lowest ebb, and the government will not be able to assist in bringing about any improvements in the conditions of the working class.

Such reforms are all that is required.

Socialism, the alternative and remedy is required. Socialism, which means the capture of the production and distribution by the working class, by the Socialist Workers of America, is the only solution to the problem of wealth production.

The entire function of Government and Parliament would then shift to that of the government of the working class. The government of the working class would provide the means of production and distribution of wealth at a rate sufficient to bring about the best conditions of life. The government of the working class would provide the means of production and distribution of wealth at a rate sufficient to bring about the best conditions of life.

Socialism requires that the government should control the means of production and distribution of wealth. The only method of providing wealth would be by the government, and the government would have to control the means of production and distribution of wealth.

A hundred and twenty-five fathers for the week have been returned, and it is expected that the number will increase. It is a great improvement, and the full list should be opened up to be seen. Keep up the good work. We need all the help we can get.
