The "shortening" of the Tobacco Trust, as economized in the legal phrase, is a resurrection of the Federal Trade Commission. Every one of the Federal Trade Commission's findings has been wrapped up in this direction. The wheel ofů the Tobacco Trust has been gradually stopped. By de- termining that the states were not free to cash their bonds, the Federal Trade Commission was able to reach the central point in the question of the future, so that a larger portion of the states could demand the return of their money. And that is the point which is significant in the Federal Trade Commission's decision. According to the Federal Trade Commission's decision, the United States is not bound by any previous decisions. In that respect, the United States courts have had no jurisdiction in the matter. They are not even bound by the decisions of the state courts. And that is the point which is significant in the Federal Trade Commission's decision.

The question of the states' jurisdiction is a question of great importance. It is not a question of whether the states have jurisdiction over the federal government. It is a question of whether the federal government has jurisdiction over the states. And that is the point which is significant in the Federal Trade Commission's decision.

In Revolutionary days, the federal government was able to assert its authority over the states. In the event of a state's refusal to comply with an order of the federal government, the federal government was able to assert its authority over the state. That was the only way in which the federal government was able to assert its authority over the states.

In the case of the Tobacco Trust, the federal government has not been able to assert its authority over the states. The federal government has not been able to assert its authority over the states because the states have refused to comply with the federal government's order. That is the only reason why the federal government has not been able to assert its authority over the states.

The federal government has not been able to assert its authority over the states because the states have refused to comply with the federal government's order. That is why the federal government has not been able to assert its authority over the states.

THE TRAGEDY IN FRISCO
A REVIEW OF THE SCIENTIFIC "EXPERT" WITNESS, AND DISTRICT ATTORNEY HENRY'S SPEECH THEREON.

By M. E. Schade.
San Francisco, Cal., July 29—The going back to Frisco to attend the Coronet Assay Office, Coroner's Court, and the James F. Moore, District At torney of San Francisco is the last resort of the sus cious, the accused, the outlaws, and the criminals in the court of the law. In the transit of the streets, the truth, the justice, and, if at all possible, the idea of what a crime is, is undermined in the outlaws and criminals.

Justice Heurin: "In keeping elections in any area, only those who have been born and raised in the United States are considered as citizens."

Henry: "Law enforcement is the task of the inspectors of the police, and not of the shop owners or employers."

The Progressive Movement of 1912, however, was not an immediate result of the "tragedy in Frisco," but it was certainly a significant factor in its development. The labor aristocracy, which had previously dominated labor movements, was beginning to lose its grip on the working class.

The "tragedy in Frisco" was a result of the combination of several factors. One of the most important was the political and economic conditions of the time. The United States was experiencing a period of rapid industrialization, and the working class was increasingly under pressure from employers and the government. This pressure led to a growing sense of hopelessness and frustration among workers, and this sense of hopelessness and frustration was a key factor in the development of the labor aristocracy.

Another important factor was the role of the labor unions. The labor unions played a key role in the development of the labor aristocracy, as they provided a framework for organizing workers and demanding better working conditions.

THE LABOR MOVEMENT IN FRANCE

GROWTH IN REVOLUTIONARY STAMINA OF THE FRENCH PROLETARIAT UNDER THE GENERAL CONFEDERATION OF LABOR.

By A. Brocker, Paris.

A foreign delegate, arriving in New York recently, gave an interesting account of the present-day conditions of the working-class movement in France, regarding it as being on the eve of a great revolution. He stated that the struggle against the social system is becoming more and more intense and that the working class is preparing for a general strike. In short, he declared that the general movement is on the march. He pointed out that the working class is becoming more and more conscious of its own power and is organizing itself into powerful trade unions. He stated that the working class is determined to overthrow the capitalist system and to establish a socialist society.

Agitation for a general strike is increasing everywhere. In Paris, the workers are demanding the abolition of the 40-hour week and the introduction of a 35-hour week.
