To the modern capitalist, the workman is a static entity, an object to be shifted from one place to another, as necessary. The modern capitalist is interested in the workman as a means to an end, not an end in itself. The workman is a part of the machinery of production, a cog in the wheel of industry.

In the case of Eli Hart, when he attempted to hire the Southern planters to cut the cotton gin, he found that the workmen were not interested in his offer. They were not interested in the work, they were only interested in the money. They were not interested in the workman as an individual, they were only interested in the workman as a means to an end.

The following is taken from a book entitled "Days of Our World's Sufferings," by Mr. W. H. Branson, and depicting the conditions in England during the Civil War. The text is as follows:

"In the place where Elias Fred, English cloth, was coming into use and was so much talked about, it was said that the English weavers could produce so much better cloth than the Americans. It was necessary that a change be made, and Elias Fred gained the upper hand in every respect. It was not long before the English gave up the struggle, and the English weavers was very much pleased with the change. They set to work and made a splendid success of it. The English gained control of the market, and the English weavers was very satisfied with the results."

L. O. TACOMA, WASH.-Now to your second question:-
If statements in the Chicago "Daily Socialist", con- cerning the late General Schuyler, are true, then the aging of is insanity is consequent to no fault of his, and the Negro is an un- manhooded by the white man and woman.-L. O. TACOMA.

H. H. LAMING, MICH.-How to your second question:-
Is there any need to be dissatisfied concerning the amount of meats that can be stated as "good," "very good," or "great"? Impossible to answer this question, as I believe the word "good" may be used in the same sense by a number of people, and have the ability to be said in many ways, each one in a different manner, yet capable of proving the evident fact of the word. I belong to the Chicago "Daily Socialists," and know that several cities have the same word in their vocabulary. The word is a household word in the United States. It is a word that is used in every city and town in the country.

As to the Daily and Weekly People.

The paragraph on the 11th, to which you refer, is not the same as the one which was printed in the Chicago "Daily Socialists." The word "good" does not mean the same thing in the two cases. In the Chicago "Daily Socialists," the word "good" means something very different from what it means in the Daily People. The Daily People also printed a paragraph on the 11th, which was the same as the one which was printed in the Chicago "Daily Socialists."
