AUSTRALIAN COAL MINERS HAMSTRING "LAW"—LAW IS NOT COAL LAW, BUSINESS IS BUSINESS,蜱

By W. H. Roper, New South Wales.

The miners have at last taught the law a lesson which all the untrue and base assertions of its optimists and advocates in the Western Miners’ Association, which is in the pay of the coal owners, will probably soon teach the coal owners. The strike brought the House of Commons to its knees, and the House of Commons, like any other organization without the power of the police, is dependent on the trade union movement for the imposition of its laws. The miners by striking, by giving the coal owners a lesson, have taught the law a lesson which it will long remember.

The miners have shown the law that it is possible to resist its authority, and that it is possible to force the law to give way. The miners have shown the law that it is possible to force the law to give way, and that it is possible to force the law to give way.

HARMONIC CAPITAL.

From the Stuttgart Beteiligung Zeitung, January 20, 1915.

White thousands of working people are growing up in response to the call of the socialist ideas, and thousands of others are becoming attracted to the socialist ideals, yet the socialists have not yet been able to build a socialist society. The socialists have not yet been able to build a socialist society.

CONFESSION OF FAITH.

By H. B. Carroll, lately of Spoken Affiliation.

Robert Arne, February 14th—In the winter of 1904 I joined the socialist movement. I am one of those who have been inspired by the socialist ideals, and who have been attracted to the socialist movement.

I feel that I have a duty to discharge as a socialist, and I am determined to discharge that duty. I am determined to discharge that duty.

Socialism says:

Cognit and Philip Sayre tell how the Enemy in His Vital Seats.

The very fact that men are dependent upon the owners of the machinery of daily life—men who toil, live, love, die—cannot mean that, for the life of that man, the machine should be the master. It is not a question of control, but of participation in the decisive control that makes the difference. It is not a question of power, but of the responsibility and the autonomy that make the difference.

Tuberculosis and the industrial revolution

By Cary Fisch, Baltimore.

When a person engaged in social work will give you the unvarnished facts upon which he is working, you know that he is doing a splendid job. But, if you do not see these unvarnished facts for yourself, you will never know what is going on. It is an occasion for rejoicing. For only then will you be able to appreciate the full significance of the work that Social Work is doing. And, if you are ever in Baltimore, and see Miss Ellen La Motte, head of the fifteen tuberculosis nurses under her direction, at her recent meeting of the Lansing Society, you will know that she is the woman I am talking about.

The aim of the society is the study of the effects of industrial tuberculosis, and Miss La Motte’s paper was received with great interest by the district nurses on that subject. After the meeting, Miss La Motte explained how, where, and when the nurses, whose duties she has accepted, have been attempting to prevent the transmission of tuberculosis from one person to another. In Brooklyn, for example, it has been necessary to prevent the spread of the disease by the use of clothing. Over 300 patients were visited in the borough. Of these, over 200 hundred; and it is to be noted by these very families receiving the clothing, that with their aid tuberculosis will have been added to the society’s work.

These facts are of particular significance in the light of the exposure of the tuberculous in the field, which is expected to be the same for the rest of the year. The report of the society will be of great value in the study of the effects of industrial tuberculosis, and Miss La Motte’s paper was received with great interest by the district nurses on that subject. After the meeting, Miss La Motte explained how, where, and when the nurses, whose duties she has accepted, have been attempting to prevent the transmission of tuberculosis from one person to another.
