CREDIT

The author, Franklin D. Roosevelt, discusses the problem of credit and the need for a more stable financial system. He criticizes the existing system as unstable and proposes a solution that would provide a more reliable source of funding for businesses and individuals.

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC

The Cleveland, O., "Observer," reports that the people of the state of Ohio are demanding action on the currency and banking questions. The state legislature is expected to introduce a bill to establish a state central bank, which would act as a lender of last resort. The newspaper also expresses concern about the rising cost of living and the need for government intervention to control it.

THE PEOPLE

The author emphasizes the importance of the people's role in governance and the need for their participation in the decision-making process. The author calls for a more democratic system where the voice of the people is heard and acted upon by those in power.

THE PATRIOT CLUB

The club's president presents a proposal for a new club activities program. The proposal includes a series of lectures, debates, and social events aimed at fostering a greater sense of community and shared values among the members.

THE EARTH "PATRIOT" IN AMERICA

The author explores the idea of patriotism in the context of the national identity of American people. The author argues that a true patriot must love and protect the nation's interests, not just its symbols and traditions.

THE REASON I SAID WHAT I SAID

The author reflects on a previous statement and explains the reasoning behind it. The author emphasizes the importance of honesty and transparency in communication.

THE RUBBER SCOURGE

The author addresses the issue of rubber shortages and the impact on the economy. The author suggests solutions to mitigate the problems caused by the shortage, including increased production and more efficient use of resources.

THE RED SIDE OF THE GREEN

The author discusses the economic challenges faced by farmers, particularly in the Midwest. The author emphasizes the need for government intervention to support the agricultural sector and ensure food security.

BAILEY AGAIN.

K. Mirosco and his son, Street, 325 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D.C.

Although the preachers had charmed and beguiled the crowd, the money was not forthcoming. One of the preachers, Mr. Bailey, increased the interest in the affair by his eloquent discourse. He told the people that the cause was just and right, and that they should give generously. The crowd was moved by his words and gave generously. The money was collected in a box, and the proceeds were used to help the poor and needy in the community. Mr. Bailey was later rewarded with a handshake and a kiss from a woman in the crowd.

RAINED AGAIN.
