A TYPICAL BATTLE

ought Up in the United States Senate for the Poor.

The figures in the Senate on the day the battle was typical of the conflict between the rich and the poor. Four of the richest men in the United States were there, all of whom owned vast estates or corporations, and yet received very little general notice. One of them was a member of the minority, and yet his speech was the best of the day. In his speech, he said:

"A TYPICAL BATTLE

The battle is fought not only in the Senate, but in the world. It is fought in the courts, in the streets, in the homes of the poor. And it is fought in the minds of the people. For the battle is not only between the rich and the poor, but between the right and the wrong. And the battle is being fought today as it was fought yesterday, and will be fought tomorrow."

CLASS CONSCIOUSNESS

Is the "Company Union" a Class Consciousness Organization?

This is a question that has been asked many times. The answer is: it depends on what you mean by class consciousness. If you mean a consciousness of the interests of the working class, then yes, the "Company Union" is a class conscious organization.

The recent issue on the tariff, raised by the "Company Union," is an example. The union has taken a stand against the tariff, which is a tax on the working class, and has demanded its repeal. This is a clear example of class consciousness.

SOCIAL CONTRASTS

Which We Are Striving to Wipe Out.

LOOK AT THIS PICTURE.

Mr. Scott of Colorado, in speaking of the "Company Union," said:

"This is a picture of the "Company Union." It is a picture of what we are striving to wipe out."

And then he said:

"Is the "Company Union" a Class Consciousness Organization?"

EUGENE V. DEBS.

"I am a socialist, and I believe in the "Company Union.""

The battle is typical of the conflict between the rich and the poor. It is fought in the courts, in the streets, in the homes of the poor. And it is fought in the minds of the people. For the battle is not only between the rich and the poor, but between the right and the wrong. And the battle is being fought today as it was fought yesterday, and will be fought tomorrow."
