"Capitains of Industry" Ready to Sacrifice all People’s Property.

When, during the Civil War, Attorney General William H. Seward declared that his patriotism required them to sacrifice "without any compensation whatever" to the war effort, he meant to frighten the rich. But now, in the terms used by the United States Senate, the financial community, under the presidency of A. H. Gates, is in danger of being labeled a traitor. "In time of war," Gates has said, "all the property and power of the nation must be mobilized for the defense of the nation." The financial community, under the leadership of A. H. Gates, has been warned that it too may be required to sacrifice its property and power to the war effort.

Condition and Prosperity of the Class of Blowers Blowers' Property.

A letter, dated Syracuse, Ind., March 14, 1898, and addressed to the efforts and condition of the Class of Blowers Blowers, read as follows: "I am informed that the class of blowers is in a state of distress. The class of blowers has a large number of members, and the number of members in the class is increasing. There is a demand for labor in the class, and the wages paid to the laborers are not sufficient to support them. The class of blowers is in need of assistance, and I request that you take steps to aid them."
