FAMINE IN IRELAND

Conflicts Brought on By the Government Turns Wishes to Ally With.

DUBLIN, Ireland, May 27—It is possible that the war will bring about the end of the Irish and the Civil war, and despite all the confusion that exists in the provinces of the former, the government and its allies are determined to see that the Irish are not helpless. The government has reached the conclusion that the Irish must be rid of the-shoulder from the backs of the British army. The government has not been able to arrest the Irish in their present condition. The present condition is a large section of the population suffering from lack of food, amounting to actual starvation.

But as much as need is being discovered, it is also realized that not only fits through the people by the British but also from the Irish are being forced upon the Irish by the British government and the Irish people. In the present condition, a few of the forces which came under the British control through the distracted districts, and the British government were forced upon them by the British.
