E D U C A T O R S.

FOOL. Pa., July 4th.—The benefit of the arts and sciences is as necessary to the crowded masses of the nation as the newspaper is to the farmer. It is a vital necessity for the increase of the general knowledge of the people. In our present condition of society, the Furtherance of these arts and sciences is our only hope of improvement. We must be ready to meet the demands of the age and to maintain our standing in the world. The time has come when every man, woman, and child must be taught to read and write. We must educate our youth to become useful citizens. The progress of society depends upon the improvement of the arts and sciences. We must cultivate our minds and acquire knowledge.

EDUCATION.

No. 1184.

THE PEOPLE, BOSTON, JULY 10, 1898.

YEARS TO INTERESTS.

SOCIALISM AND ITS OBJECTIONS.

By A. M. Simon, Chicago.

It is the prevalent opinion that the working classes are discontented with their condition, and that the laborer is discontented with his life. The working classes are, however, the only class of the people who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life.

It is, therefore, the working classes who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life. The working classes are, however, the only class of the people who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life.

It is, therefore, the working classes who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life. The working classes are, however, the only class of the people who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life.

It is, therefore, the working classes who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life. The working classes are, however, the only class of the people who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life.

It is, therefore, the working classes who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life. The working classes are, however, the only class of the people who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life.

It is, therefore, the working classes who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life. The working classes are, however, the only class of the people who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life.

It is, therefore, the working classes who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life. The working classes are, however, the only class of the people who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life.

It is, therefore, the working classes who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life. The working classes are, however, the only class of the people who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life.

It is, therefore, the working classes who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life. The working classes are, however, the only class of the people who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life.

It is, therefore, the working classes who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life. The working classes are, however, the only class of the people who are discontented with their condition, and the only class of the people who are discontented with their life.