CAPITALIST DICTATORSHIP MARKS MAY 1 BEGINNING OF STRUGGLE
BOSSES GAGE GAINS AGAINST WORKERS AND FURTHER DRIVE TO BREAK UNION

If there was any doubt that American Labor and Capital, it faded on May 1st. That day a world-wide strike was launched by 150,000 workers in scores of trades and factories in every important city, as part of an agreement between Capital and Labor to break their silence and their dictatorships over the workers in their struggle. The municipal government of St. Louis, with the support of the provost marshal, sent 200 military police and other officials to the city, and a smaller force was sent to the cities of Chicago and New York. The strike was more or less limited to the strikers in St. Louis, but the news of the strike was carried by the strikers to the cities and in some places in the country, where it was used as a weapon in the struggle.

The strike was not a success for Capital, but it was a success for Labor. The strikers were met by union organizers in every city, and the spirit of the struggle was felt in every city and every town. The struggle was not a success for the bosses, but it was a success for the workers. The workers were not defeated, but they were not defeated. They were organized and they were united, and they were ready to fight to the end.

THE 2nd CONGRESS OF THE 3rd, COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL: Moscow 1920

THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL's 2nd Congress began with the appearance upon the floor of Dzhugashvili, from Cooke's Organized Communist Party of Germany, who in their speeches note the evolution of their party, which has been a source of satisfaction to some millions of workers of the most revolutionary portion of the German proletariat.

"It may be," they say, "that our party cannot oppose the march of the revolution in Germany. It is now strengthening its political lines. A number of the leading Central Committees recently took place in Berlin, under the leadership of the Independent German Party, the development of which has been marked by the slogan ‘Hands off Soviet Russia.’"

The refusal of the Congress to include the Party of the Independent German is, in the minds of the German revolutionists, not without an international policy and international ideal, and perhaps it will be expedient to create its own international organization.

In response to these representations, Communist Mache, from the Congress, said, "The Congress is not considering the question of including the Party of the Independent German in the 3rd International. The Congress is not opposed to the formation of a separate organization of the German revolutionists."

The following report and this evidence shows that in the fallacious moment of the German revolutionists, the Congress recognized that as others of Russia, those of Germany, may find themselves, through the straitened course and by the betraying the German revolutionists, may find themselves included in the 2nd International, and later on, incorporated with the International, but that in this case the report and evidence, it demonstrates the courage, fidelity, and the vanguard of the 3rd International.

[The report continues with further details on the congress and its proceedings, but the full text is not provided in this excerpt.]

STATEMENT OF COMRADE LENIN

Lenin begins on July 27, 1920, and continues on August 3, 1920, giving a detailed account of the activities of the 2nd Congress of the Communist International. He says that the Congress was attended by 35 delegates from 33 countries, and that the majority of the delegates were from Russia.

As for the report of the Independent German Party, he says that the report was presented by Comrade Mache, who was then elected as a member of the 3rd International's Central Committee.

The Congress adjourned on August 3, 1920, with a final report of the proceedings, and the resolution of the Congress was published in the "Toiler," a German newspaper, on the same day.

The 3rd International's Central Committee was elected by the Congress, and the new committee consisted of 25 members.

The 3rd International was established at the 2nd Congress of the Communist International on March 26, 1920, in Moscow, with the aim of unifying the various communist parties of the world, and of developing a common strategy for international revolution.

The 3rd International was the successor to the 2nd International, which had been founded in 1889. The 2nd International had been dissolved by the 3rd International, and the 3rd International was the first International to be led by a single, international, and centralized leadership.

The 3rd International was composed of representatives from all the countries of the world, and it was the first International to have a permanent secretariat.

The 3rd International was dissolved in 1936, and its place was taken by the 4th International, which was founded in 1936.

The World Revolution and the Immediate Tasks of the Industrial Organization of the British Workers.

By J. T. MURPHY

A crisis represented in the history of modern industry is upon us. The situation is slipping down. Millions of workers are already being thrown into the ranks of the unemployed. But a single capitalist government is not capable of dealing with this situation. There is nothing for them to do but to flee from the working class, to make the workers face the consequences of their own organization.

The International Capitalist System is being shaken to its foundations by the general economic crisis. The working class is the only force left to us to solve the problem of the economy. The Working Class must take control of the world. The Working Class must take control of the state.

The working class is the only force that can save the world. The working class must be organized.
