Battle of the Ballots

By AUGUST BREBEL

Translated by A. M. SERVING for the Review.

The battle of the ballots is past. The Fifth of June brought what the Fifth of May had promised — the victory of the social democratic party. The socialists have justified the hopes entertained on May 1st. The general elections were, indeed, a battle between the social democrats and the bourgeoisie, and the latter did not fail to feel the full effect of the Social Democratic party campaign. But the bourgeoisie that day received the due reward for all its efforts and of the way in which it controlled the mass of the workers. In the last few days of the campaign, a large number of workers, who were feeling the pressure of the socialists, joined the Social Democratic party. In some cases, the Social Democrats were able to gain the support of the workers, and in others, the workers were merely indifferent. But the Social Democrats were not able to hold their own in the battle against the Social Democratic party. The socialists won the day and the future of the Social Democratic party was immediately assured.

As to the struggle in the factories, the struggle between the socialists and the bourgeoisie was not carried on without bloodshed and with much opposition on the part of the employers. But the socialists were able to overcome all obstacles and to gain the support of the workers in the factories. The Social Democratic party, on the other hand, was not able to carry on its struggle without opposition. It was opposed by the employers, who were determined to keep their workers from joining the Social Democratic party. The struggle was carried on in the factories, and the employers were not able to overcome the socialists. The Social Democratic party was able to gain the support of the workers in the factories, and the employers were forced to give in.

The Social Democratic party has won the battle of the ballots. The victory of the social democrats has been a great victory for the working class. The socialists have been able to carry on their struggle and to gain the support of the workers. The Social Democratic party, on the other hand, has been defeated. The Social Democratic party was not able to carry on its struggle and to gain the support of the workers. The Social Democratic party has been defeated and the future of the Social Democratic party was immediately assured.
