The Tactics of the German Socialist Movement

BY ERNEST EFFERMAN

During the last two or three months the American capitalist press has been turning over momentsomewhatmountain hitch in its reports of recent events in the German socialist movement. There has been a continuous flow of stories about the supposed imminent breakdown of the socialist movement in Germany. The American capitalist press has been treating this situation as if it were a major crisis in the development of socialism and communism.

The capitalist press is unanimous in its view that the German socialist movement is in a state of crisis and that it is facing a serious challenge. This is a great mistake, according to Mr. Efferman, and he goes on to explain why this is so.

The Capitalist Press

In his article, Mr. Efferman points out that the capitalist press is not an objective or impartial source of information. It is heavily influenced by the capitalist class and its goals. The capitalist press is trying to create a perception of crisis in the socialist movement in order to undermine its credibility and influence.

The Socialist Movement

Mr. Efferman goes on to explain that the socialist movement in Germany is far from being in crisis. The movement has faced many challenges in the past, but it has always been able to overcome them.

The socialist movement in Germany is composed of a diverse group of committed socialists who are united in their goal of creating a socialist society. The movement has a strong base of support and is well-organized.

The socialist movement in Germany is also facing some challenges, such as internal divisions and the pressure from the capitalist class. However, these challenges are not as serious as they are portrayed to be in the capitalist press.

Conclusion

In conclusion, Mr. Efferman argues that the capitalist press is not a reliable source of information on the socialist movement in Germany. The movement is far from being in crisis and is able to overcome the challenges it faces. The capitalist press is attempting to create a perception of crisis in order to undermine the socialist movement.
