THE GOVERNMENT BY THE COURTS.

P. A. Douglass in 'The Public and the Police' says, 'The police department forms the executive branch of the government which abstracts all the other branches and turns them into mere decorative appendages.'

The government by the courts is probably the most complete of the great political nuisances which are now slowly being developed. It is not a mere matter of the judges of courts and the clerks of courts, but of the whole apparatus of the courts, from the sheriff to the court clerk.

In the long course of years the judges have worked out a system of rules and regulations which make the courts work like a well-oiled machine. They are a sort of machinery by which the government is conducted, and their work is to keep the machinery running smoothly.

The judges are not merely the people who sit in the courtrooms and decide cases, but they are the people who make the rules and regulations by which the courts are governed. They are the people who keep the machinery running smoothly, and they are the people who keep the machinery running smoothly.

The judges are the people who make the rules and regulations by which the courts are governed. They are the people who keep the machinery running smoothly, and they are the people who keep the machinery running smoothly.

The lesson in Australia.

W. M. Creino, freneauon (3535 10th Street, San Francisco), is in Australia. He is on a tour of inspection for the purpose of determining the status of the Labor party. He is also in Australia on the instructions of the Socialist party of the United States. Mr. Creino has been in contact with the labor movement in that country, and has been instrumental in organizing the Socialist party of Australia.

Problem: Why are there so many policemen in the United States?

Police are necessary to maintain order in a society. They help to enforce laws, prevent crime, and protect citizens. In the United States, where there is a high population density and a large number of different groups with varying interests, the need for police is even greater. The police are responsible for ensuring public safety and maintaining law and order.

THE NEW ILLINOIS PRIMARY LAW.

The primary law of Illinois has been in effect since 1893. It was enacted to provide for the nomination of candidates for public office by the political parties of the state. The law requires that the party conventions be held in the counties of the state and that a majority of the votes cast in the county be for a candidate in order for that candidate to be nominated. The law has been the subject of much debate and controversy over the years, with some arguing that it is a violation of the party's right to nominate their own candidates and others arguing that it is necessary to ensure the representation of all factions within the party. The law has been amended several times over the years, but the basic provisions remain the same. The law has been a source of contention for many years and continues to be a subject of debate among political officials and the public at large.
