THE NEW CHIVALRY.

A STORY BY HARLON A. SIMON.

He built into his cells a pattern of the race.

He built into his cells a pattern of the race. He was a man of the people, of the laboring masses. He had worked among them, he had lived among them, he had married one of them, he had thought with them. He knew them, he understood them, he loved them. He had been a labor organizer, a union organizer, a newspaper publisher. He had been a fighter for the rights of the workers, for the rights of the oppressed, for the rights of the poor. He had been a socialist, a revolutionary, a believer in the power of the masses. He had built into his cells a pattern of the race.
