ECHOES OF THE CLASS STRUGGLE.

What the Tanners Are Doing Through Their Union Organization, and Conditions in Their Attempt to Improve Their Own Wages.

Tanners, as a group, are one of the oldest trades in the land, yet they are still in the same condition as when they were first organized. They have not made much progress in the last few years, and it is evident that they are not getting any better.

One of the great mistakes the tanners make is that they do not work together. They are divided into different unions, and each union has its own interests, and they are not able to work as a whole.

Those who work together can do more work and get better wages than those who work alone. They can also do more work and get better wages than those who work alone.

The tanners are not doing this, and it is evident that they are not going to do so until they are organized as one union.

Tanner's strike of 1894 was a complete failure, and it is evident that they are not going to do any better this time.

The tanners are not able to get better wages, and it is evident that they are not going to do any better this time.

THE CHICAGO SOCIALIST

THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION.

Just a few years ago the struggle of the Russian masses for the fulfillment of their inalienable right to exist in freedom and independence, and to determine their own destiny without interference by any foreign power, was being carried on in the midst of the most brutal and ruthless oppression. The Russian proletariat, in common with the toiling masses of all the great industrial countries, was being subjected to the most cruel exploitation and degradation. The capitalist class, in its ruthless pursuit of profit, was sacrificing the lives and liberties of the working people in order to accumulate wealth and power. The struggle of the Russian masses was being carried on in the face of overwhelming odds, and the victory of the socialist revolution was far from assured.

The Russian Revolution of 1917 was a result of the development of the economic and political conditions in Russia. The capitalists, in their efforts to maintain their power, had created a situation in which the masses were unable to meet the demands of modern industry. The capitalist class was finding it increasingly difficult to maintain its power, and the working class was finding it increasingly difficult to live.
