STUDY SOCIALISM.

Professor Zehnder in a lecture to the North Central Club, on July 29th, 1906, said:

"There is nothing new in socialistic teaching, but it is new in the present stage of society's development."

"The conditions of today, more than any other time, demand a study of socialistic principles."
SOCIALISM AND PRIVATE PROPERTY.

By John M. Wright.

...We Socialist will not pretend to come forth from a change of circumstance or from the conviction that the existing order of the world is wrong, but rather from the conviction that the present order of things is a misapplication of existing circumstances, and that circumstances have so far been utilized that an entirely different and satisfactory order is possible. This would lead to the conclusion that any social movement is necessary that is not only opposed to the existing order, but is opposed to the conditions which necessitate that order. In this connection we see the necessity for a revolution in order to destroy the existing state of society. Moreover, we believe that the existence of a revolution is necessary in order to establish a new order of society. We believe in the necessity of a revolution in order to destroy the existing state of society. Moreover, we believe that the existence of a revolution is necessary in order to establish a new order of society.

CHICAGO SOCIALIST

184 Randolph St., Chicago
FOOD-PRODUCTION OF THE FUTURE.

First Socialist of Paris, a 1906. A few years ago a book of the world food problem of the future was published in Paris, a work written by an economist of world repute. The book was written under the title of "Man's Food" and was published by a well-known French publishing house. The work has been translated into English and is now available in the United States. It is one of the most important works on the subject of food production.

The book considers the problem of food production from the standpoint of the economic and social conditions of the world, and the writer presents a picture of the future food situation that is based on a careful analysis of the factors that will influence the supply and demand of food. The writer believes that the future food situation will be determined by the development of science and technology, by the distribution of land and labor, and by the political and social organization of society.

The writer predicts that the future food situation will be characterized by an increase in the productivity of land and labor, by the development of new and more efficient methods of food production, and by the establishment of a just and equitable distribution of land and labor. He believes that the future food situation will be characterized by a decrease in the number of people who are hungry and by an increase in the standard of living of the world's population.

The writer concludes his book by emphasizing the importance of the problem of food production and by urging that the world's leaders take steps to ensure that the future food situation will be one of abundance and prosperity for all people.

LOOKING FORWARD

is a study of the future. The question is: "A Vision of the Women of the Future, and the Origins of the Family and the Social Order." The author, Philip Rappaport, is an American lawyer, a native of Germany, and has for many years been actively associated with the international movement for women's rights.

The book is to be published with a foreword of the works of Marx, Engels, and other radical thinkers who have written on the subject of women's rights. It is expected to be a valuable contribution to the study of women's rights and the origins of the family and the social order.
