ENLISTING THE WOMEN.

Women have been induced into the industrial service of the Kanawha for the following reasons:

1. The desire to be part of the revolution.
2. The economic necessity to support their families.
3. The persuasive efforts of male industrial leaders.
4. The opportunity to gain power and influence.
5. The desire to make a difference in society.

The industrial leaders of the Kanawha have used various tactics to recruit women, including promises of better pay, improved working conditions, and opportunities for advancement.

The recruitment of women has had a significant impact on the workforce, with women now comprising a substantial portion of the industrial labor force. This has led to increased productivity and improved working conditions for all workers.
