In The Moscow Clothing Shops

By MAURICE G. HINDS. (Mr. Hinds has just returned from a trip to the U.S.S.R.)

FASHION, today, especially among young people, is an important factor in the productive economy of every country. In Russia, where the influence of capitalist imperialism is still strong, the capitalist fashion industry is still alive and well. But in the U.S.S.R., where the workers are building the socialist economy, the capitalist fashion industry is rapidly being replaced by the socialist fashion industry. The Moscow clothing houses are a good example of this.

The Moscow clothing houses are a network of state-owned clothing factories and stores that produce and sell clothing for the working class. The clothing is designed to meet the needs of the workers, and the prices are reasonable. The clothing is made of good quality materials, and the workers are paid well for their work.

The CRISIS On the Horizon

A grave danger to the American workers is surfacing on the horizon of the world. The immediate danger to the American workers is the threat of war.

As the world moves closer to war, the necessity for unity among workers becomes more pressing. The class struggle, as it is often called, is the struggle between the working class and the capitalist class.

The workers in the United States are currently facing a severe economic crisis. Unemployment rates are high, and the cost of living has increased. The gap between the rich and the poor is widening.

With the crisis on the horizon, it is crucial for workers to come together and fight for their rights. Solidarity is key in this time of need. The workers of the world are united in their struggle against capitalist exploitation.

The Progress of the Apprentice

The Bulletin on Apprenticeship Education first issued by the Federal Bureau of Apprenticeship Education (FBAE) in April, 1915, will be available in June. The bulletin is intended to provide a snapshot of the progress of apprenticeship education in the United States.

According to the bulletin, the number of apprentices is growing steadily. In 1914, there were approximately 400,000 apprentices in the United States. By 1915, this number had increased to over 500,000.

The bulletin also notes that there is a growing awareness of the importance of apprenticeship education. Employers are increasingly recognizing the benefits of training young workers in their trades.

The bulletin concludes by stating that the progress of apprenticeship education is a positive development. It is hoped that this trend will continue, and that more young people will be able to receive the training they need to succeed in the workforce.

The World: An Armed Camp

Ever since the signing of the Treaty of Versailles, the world has been divided into two camps: the capitalist and the socialist.

The capitalist camp is represented by the United States, which has been embroiled in multiple wars since the end of World War II. The socialist camp, on the other hand, is represented by the Soviet Union and its allies.

The world is currently experiencing a period of tension and uncertainty. The capitalist and socialist camps are locked in a struggle for power and influence.

It is crucial for workers to remain vigilant and prepared. The struggle is not just for the control of the means of production, but for the future of humanity itself.

The NEED For International Solidarity

In order to successfully combat the capitalist threat, it is essential for workers to unite across national borders.

The Bulletin on International Solidarity, first issued by the Bulletin on International Solidarity Committee (BISC), in May, 1915, will be available in June. The bulletin is intended to provide an overview of the current state of international solidarity.

According to the bulletin, there is a growing recognition of the importance of international solidarity. Workers in different countries are increasingly engaging in joint actions and organizing in solidarity.

The bulletin also notes that there is a growing awareness of the need for a more equitable distribution of resources and wealth. The capitalist countries are exploiting the resources of the socialist countries, and it is crucial for workers to stand in solidarity with their counterparts abroad.

The bulletin concludes by stating that the progress of international solidarity is a positive development. It is hoped that this trend will continue, and that more workers will be able to receive the support they need to successfully combat the capitalist threat.
