"Why and What Is June 17th?" - By Earl B. Browder

Among the leading workers among the workers, committed to the cause of the working class, there is a growing awareness of the significance of the events of June 17, 1937, and the implications they hold for our movement today. It is a day that marks the beginning of a period of intense struggle and mobilization, a period that laid the foundation for the growth and development of the Communist Party of the United States.

On June 17, 1937, a group of workers, led by the Young Workers League, marched against the forces of reaction and exploitation. Their struggle was not just a fight for better wages and working conditions, but a fight for the freedom of the working class, for the right to organize and to fight for a better society.

The Young Workers League, under the leadership of the Communist Party, played a crucial role in organizing the workers of the time. They were the vanguard of the working class, the true leaders of the revolution.

Today, as we commemorate June 17, let us remember the sacrifices of those who fought for the working class. Let us honor their memory and continue their fight for a better world.

Let us not forget that the struggle is not over. There is still much work to be done. We must continue to fight for the freedom of the working class, for a world where the principles of socialism are realized.

Let us remember June 17, let us honor those who fought, and let us continue their struggle until victory is achieved.
