The American League and the U.C.I. Bureau Session

By MAX SHAGHIANIAN.

The American League and the U.C.I. Bureau session took place on April 16, 1926, in Brussels, Belgium. The meeting was attended by representatives of various national cycling federations, including the United States. The main topics discussed were the rules of the game, the future development of cycling, and the organization of the U.C.I. bureau.

The American League was formed in 1912 and is one of the world's oldest cycling organizations. It consists of members from the United States, Canada, and other countries. The U.C.I. is the international cycling federation and is responsible for organizing events such as the Tour de France and the Giro d'Italia.

During the session, the American League asked for more autonomy in the organization of their domestic events. They also requested that the U.C.I. support their efforts to promote cycling in the United States and to help improve the standards of their national championships.

The U.C.I. bureau agreed to support these requests and to work with the American League to develop a joint strategy for the promotion of cycling in the United States. The meeting was seen as a positive step towards the strengthening of cycling as a sport at both the national and international levels.

This meeting highlights the importance of international cooperation in the development of cycling and the need for a strong partnership between national and international organizations to achieve the common goal of promoting cycling as a sport.
