French and Spanish Land Navies are in Offensive on Riffs.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—This week has been marked by the most intense naval battles of the war. The French and Spanish navies have moved against the British in the Channel and the Dardanelles. The ships of both navies have been seen in the Channel, and there is a general expectation that a battle will be fought between French and Spanish forces in the Dardanelles. In the waters of the port of Spanish Morocco, which is directly opposite to the British, the French ships have been seen carrying on a heavy bombardment of the port. The French have been seen to be superior in numbers, and it is expected that they will gain the upper hand.

The American fleet is on the way to the scene of the fighting, and it is expected that it will arrive in time to assist the British. The American fleet is larger than the French and Spanish navies combined, and it is expected that it will be able to hold its own against the enemy.

The French forces are expected to make a large landing at the port of Spanish Morocco, and it is expected that they will be able to capture the port and control the Channel. The American fleet is expected to take part in the battle, and it is expected that it will be able to assist the British in their efforts to repel the French.

The situation is tense, and there is a general expectation that a major battle will be fought in the Channel and the Dardanelles. RUSH TO AID OF "YOUNG WORKER"

Hartford, Conn., Sends $31 to Save the Weekly

"The weekly Young Worker is in danger!"

No sooner did this call go out to all the branches of the Young Women's Labor League than answers started in from all over the country to show the timeliness of the appeal. In a few days a number of gifts came in, the last being a check for $31 sent from the Young Worker office in Hartford, Connecticut. This week we are receiving similar gifts from readers in other parts of the country. Proceeds from these gifts will be used for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Young Worker.

The Young Women's Labor League has been asked to urge our subscribers to stimulate interest in saving the Young Worker. The League is ready to do this, and will make a special appeal to each branch. The League will also seek to have the Young Worker, every branch, every member do its utmost to help in the saving of the Young Worker. The old custom of making a regular check on the Young Worker, to keep your subscriptions up, will continue. The Young Worker can be saved if you don't give up and you don't let it die.

The Young Worker is a weekly paper and monthly magazine. It is published to help workers, to further the aims of the Young Women's Labor League, and to promote the interests of working women. It is a labor organ, a workers' paper, and a fighting weekly. It is the only paper in this country which is exclusively devoted to the interests of working women. It is a national organ, a workers' paper, and a fighting weekly. It is a labor organ, a workers' paper, and a fighting weekly. Morocco, the Key to the Mediterranean

The Rif War and the European Tangle

The first part of the Spanish-Portuguese intervention in Morocco was the Rif War, which broke out in 1921 and lasted until 1926. The Rif War was a conflict between the Moroccan government and a group of Berber tribes, the Rifians, who were fighting for independence from Spanish occupation. The Rif War was significant because it was one of the first major conflicts in the region that involved European powers, and it helped to shape the political landscape of North Africa.

The Rif War began when the Spanish colonial government attempted to extend its control over the Rif region, which had been under the control of the Rifian tribes for centuries. The Rifians resisted the Spanish occupation, and the conflict quickly escalated into a full-scale war. The Rif War was characterized by intense fighting and high casualties, and it lasted for more than five years.

The conflict was a significant event for the region because it highlighted the tension between European powers and the indigenous population of North Africa. It also demonstrated the weaknesses of the Moroccan government, which was unable to effectively defend itself against the Spanish invasion.

The Rif War ended in 1926 with a treaty that granted the Rif region a degree of self-government, but it did not bring about full independence. The Rifians continued to fight for their autonomy, and the conflict contributed to the rise of the nationalist movement in Morocco.

The Anti-Militarist Struggle of the Youth

The Rif War was a significant event for the region because it highlighted the tension between European powers and the indigenous population of North Africa. It also demonstrated the weaknesses of the Moroccan government, which was unable to effectively defend itself against the Spanish invasion.
