

Youth vs. anthracite

By PAT TOOMEY AND AUGUST VALDES

In Northeastern Pennsylvania, just outside of Scranton, the year has been the year of anthracite. Within the boundaries of the anthracite mining area, the Y.W.C.A. for national Y.M.C.A. purposes. The results of the investigation are still preliminary, and the report is only an initial attempt to bring the problem to light. However, the findings are significant and point to the need for urgent action to combat child labor in anthracite mining areas. The report indicates that children as young as five years old are employed in the mines, working long hours under hazardous conditions. The findings also reveal that many children are forced to leave school to work in the mines in order to help support their families. This situation is particularly prevalent in rural areas where there are few employment opportunities for adults. The report recommends that the government implement measures to protect children's rights and ensure their education. It also calls for the establishment of tracking systems to monitor child labor and prevent the practice. Overall, the findings highlight the urgent need for action to address the issue of child labor in anthracite mining areas.

The Spirit of 1919—To Greet the Fleet

The Syrian Fight for Independence

A month ago there appeared in the Syrian press the stirring "Spirit of 1919" reports that the struggle in the country was crushingly and successfully won. That portion of the French press which has been able to get at the truth of the matter has been particularly careful in its statements, and has constantly emphasized the moral and political significance of the Syrian movement, which has been going on in the wake of the victorious spirit of the year 1919.

The Syrian people, after a long struggle, have at last succeeded in realizing their national aspirations and desires. The spirit of 1919, which has been the mainspring of the movement, has been a powerful force in the hands of the Syrian people. N.E.C. Resolution for the Bolshveivization of the League

N.E.C. Resolution for the Bolshveivization of the League is a document that outlines the objectives and strategies for the Bolshveivization of the League, emphasizing the need for a more radical approach in the organization. The document highlights the importance of working class participation and the role of the League in supporting workers' rights and interests. It calls for a transformation of the organization to align more closely with the principles of the Bolshevik Party, reflecting the broader political and social changes occurring in the country at the time.

The resolution was adopted by the National Executive Committee (N.E.C.) of the League in 1921, and it became a key in the process of Bolshveivization, which was a significant step in the development of the League as a part of the wider Bolshevik movement in the United States. The document is notable for its emphasis on the role of workers in shaping the political landscape and for its commitment to promoting the interests of the working class.
