The Young Worker is Four Years Old Today

After four years of struggle to make our paper a force on a mass scale in work, we feel we can now say that we have travelled and take pride in the progress that we have made. Our paper was born as a small magazine which was much easier and educational in the beginning and now that the struggle is the work of hundreds of the young and adult strikers, our paper is rapidly growing.

LOUISIANA: As the young workers in the textile factories struggle to make their cut, the work of the Louisiana Young Workers' Committee is gaining in importance. The Young Workers' Committee has decided to publish a monthly magazine, aiming at the youth in the factories, to educate them in their struggle for better conditions.

DAKOTA: The Young Workers' Committee in the Dakota coal mines has decided to publish a monthly magazine, "The Worker," aimed at the youth in the mines, to educate them in their struggle for better conditions.

The Young Workers' Committee in the West is rapidly growing. In the past year, the committee has published several magazines, "The Young Worker," "The Young Worker's Weekly," and "The Young Worker's Penny Magazine," aimed at the youth in the factories, mines, and fields. The committee is working hard to educate the youth in the West in their struggle for better conditions.

FURRIERS’ STRIKE

The emphasis for this issue lies on the Furriers’ Strike in New York City. Furriers have been struggling for recognition of their union over a long period of time. It is significant to note that the strike is supported by the officials of a strong trade union, the Furriers’ and Leatherworkers’ Union of the American Federation of Labor, which is one of the leading bodies in the trade union movement.

The strike is for recognition and higher wages. The furriers have been working hard to organize and to gain the rights that are theirs as workers. This struggle is not only for themselves, but also for all workers who struggle for recognition and better working conditions.

In summary, the Furriers’ Strike is a significant event in the movement for workers’ rights and recognition. It demonstrates the power of the trade union movement and the determination of workers to improve their conditions.
