The Malian President attended China’s National Day celebrations in Peking. During his brief stay, he held talks with Chairman Liu and Premier Chou and visited places of interest in the capital. He will shortly return to China to continue his state visit.

The great crowd gathered at Peking Airport gave President Keita and his party a brilliant send-off. Peking Review, No. 41
Chairman Tung Pi-wu, Premier Chou En-lai, Vice-Premiers Chen Yi and Po I-po, and many other guests. President Alphonse Massamba-Debat of the Congo (Brazzaville) was also present.

Vice-Premier Chen Yi paid tribute to the great achievements of the Guinean people in defending their country's independence and sovereignty and developing their national economy and culture.

Referring to the Second Conference of Non-Aligned Countries in Cairo, he expressed the hope that it would yield positive results and assist in opposing imperialism and new and old colonialism, supporting the national independence movements and preserving world peace. He pledged that China, along with the other Asian-African countries, would make active preparations and work for the success of the Second African-Asian Conference to be held in Algeria next year. He pointed out that the Second Conference of Non-Aligned Countries and the Second African-Asian Conference should promote and advance each other and not exclude or counteract each other.

“We note with satisfaction,” said Vice-Premier Chen Yi, “that this view of ours has become the common view of an increasing number of Asian-African countries.”

Speaking of Asian-African solidarity, the Vice-Premier recalled that the peoples of the Asian and African countries had had a similar historical experience and were confronted with a common fighting task. “We need to strengthen still more our solidarity, cooperation and mutual support in opposing imperialism and new and old colonialism, upholding national independence, developing the national economy and defending world peace,” said Vice-Premier Chen Yi.

Ambassador Camara Mamady, in his speech, reiterated his people’s support for the anti-imperialist and anti-colonialist struggle of the world.

Speaking of Sino-Guinean friendship, the Ambassador said: “The Guinean people sincerely rejoice over the victories won by the Chinese people and wish them new and greater successes. The plot of imperialism to isolate China has met with abject defeat, and China has become greater, has won respect in the world and has more and more friends.”

Premier Chou Greets Conference of Non-Aligned Countries

Premier Chou En-lai on October 4 sent a message of greetings to the Second Conference of Non-Aligned Countries which opened in Cairo on Monday (October 5). The message reads:

“The First Conference of Non-Aligned Countries held in 1961 has played a positive role in the cause of the people of the world against imperialism, unscrupulously carrying out activities hostile to the G.D.R. and for isolating it, violating its sovereignty, and threatening peace in Europe and the world. The Chinese Government and people reaffirm their resolute support for the just struggle of the people of the G.D.R. against the U.S. imperialist policies of aggression and war, against West German militarism and revanchism, for the conclusion of a German peace treaty and in defence of their national sovereignty.

“A profound friendship exists between the Chinese and German peoples; to safeguard and strengthen this friendship not only fully conforms to the fundamental interests of our two peoples but is also conducive to the unity of the socialist camp and the common struggle against imperialism. On the basis of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism and in accordance with the revolutionary principles of the 1957 Declaration and the 1960 Statement, the Chinese people will, as always, struggle to strengthen the friendship and unity of the Chinese and German peoples, uphold the unity of the socialist camp, oppose imperialism and defend world peace.

“May the people of the G.D.R. achieve new successes in the cause of building up their country. May the friendship between the Chinese and German peoples consolidate and develop.”

Hold High the Revolutionary Banner Of Marxism-Leninism
—Commemorating Centenary of the First International—

Following is a translation of "Renmin Ribao's" September 24 editorial. Subheads are ours.—Ed.

One hundred years ago, on September 28, 1864, the first international revolutionary organization of the proletariat, the International Working Men's Association, was set up in London.

The international communist movement since that time has overcome all obstacles and developed apace with unparalleled vitality. The radiance of communism has illumined mankind's road of advance.

The First International Is Immortal

Under the leadership of Marx and Engels the First International closely integrated scientific socialism with the international workers' movement and mapped out the correct line for the proletarian revolution. Influenced by the First International, the working class of Paris staged an armed uprising and set up the Paris Commune, the first revolutionary regime of the proletariat in history. Marx and Engels summed up the experiences of the Paris Commune and enriched the Marxist theory concerning the proletarian revolution and the dictatorship of the proletariat.

Throughout the period of the First International, Marx and Engels waged a principled and uncompromising struggle against opportunism and splittism of every shade and hue. As a result of the success of this struggle, Marxism became predominant in the international workers' movement.

Evaluating the First International, Lenin said: "It will not be forgotten, it will go down in the history of the workers' struggle for their own emancipation." "The First International laid the foundation of the proletarian, international struggle for socialism."

The Second International was established in 1889. During its existence, Marxism was propagated on a larger scale and the international workers' movement made greater progress. At the same time, however, opportunism, intoxicated with the legal, parliamentary road, spread within the Parties of a number of countries. Engels fought it uncompromisingly. After his death, the revisionists gradually usurped the leadership of the Second International. As Lenin pointed out: "The period of the Second International was a period in which the soil was prepared for the broad, mass ex-

to oppose revolution has always been the watershed between Marxism and all sorts of opportunism and revisionism and between proletarian revolutionaries and all renegades from the proletariat.

What are the traditions of the First International founded by Marx? Clearly, they are the traditions of revolution, the traditions of the revolutionary workers of the Paris Commune.

In his speech “On the Seventh Anniversary of the International,” Marx pointed out that “the Commune was the latest and greatest of all movements that have taken place. The Commune was—and there can be no two opinions about this—the conquest of political power by the working class.” He added: “But the dictatorship of the proletariat is indispensable, before the realization of such changes (the transfer of all the means of labour to the producers—editor) becomes possible, and the first and foremost condition for the dictatorship is an army of the proletariat. The right of the working class to its own emancipation must be won on the battlefield. The task of the International is to organize and unite the forces of the working class for the coming struggle.”

Who are the successors to the revolutionary traditions of the First International, and of the Paris Commune? No doubt, they are Lenin, Stalin and all other Marxist-Leninists.

It is common knowledge that Leninism is Marxism in the epoch of imperialism and proletarian revolution. The quintessence of Leninism is the proletarian revolution and the dictatorship of the proletariat. Lenin explicitly pointed out, “Only he is a Marxist who extends the recognition of the class struggle to the recognition of the dictatorship of the proletariat.”

This principle advanced by Lenin remains an incontrovertible truth. Now, as ever, only those who adhere to the proletarian revolution and the dictatorship of the proletariat are Marxist-Leninists and fighters abiding by the revolutionary traditions of the First International.

In the period of the First International, all the anti-Marxist groups, the Proudhonists, the Bakuninists, the Syndicalists and the Lassalleans did not understand at all and did not want to understand the experience and lessons of the Paris Commune and they all refused to recognize the need for the working class to replace the old, crushed state machinery by a new one. They had all sunk to opportunism and become renegades from the proletariat and lackeys in the service of the bourgeois reactionaries.

Hence, standing opposed to Marxist revolutionary traditions of the First International is the opportunist tradition, the tradition of opposing and liquidating the revolution, the tradition of the renegades and the tradition of being slaves of the bourgeois reactionaries.

Who have inherited these traditions? The old-line revisionists such as Bernstein, Kautsky and their ilk and the modern revisionists headed by Khrushchow.

These revisionists’ betrayal of Marxism and the proletariat finds its concentrated expression in their opposition to violent revolution, to the dictatorship of the proletariat and in their pleas for peaceful transition of capitalism to socialism. They indulge in the illusion about the parliamentary road and renounce the revolutionary task of seizing power, turning the proletarian party into an electioneering party, a parliamentary party, an appendage of the bourgeoisie and an instrument for supporting the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie. The modern revisionists also want to liquidate the dictatorship of the proletariat in the socialist countries and turn the dictatorship of the proletariat into the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie.

In commemorating the centenary of the founding of the First International, we must resolutely carry forward the revolutionary traditions of Marxism-Leninism and oppose the reactionary traditions of opportunism and revisionism.

Struggle Between Upholding Unity And Creating a Split

Since the founding of the First International, the struggle between the upholding of unity and creating a split has never ceased in the international communist movement. In essence, this is a struggle between Marxism and opportunism, between adherence to Marxism and its betrayal.

The unity of the international communist movement is built on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and revolutionary principles. Perseverance in principle is inseparably linked with the upholding of unity. To renounce principle and collude with opportunism and revisionism is betrayal of Marxism-Leninism.

History shows that every split in the communist movement has invariably been caused by the opposition to and betrayal of Marxism by the opportunists and revisionists and by their jettisoning the principle of proletarian internationalism and practising national chauvinism. The splitism we condemn is the breaking away from Marxism-Leninism, from the revolutionary party of the proletariat and from the revolutionary proletariat and the broad masses of the labouring people.

The opportunist groups in the period of the First International, and the Bakuninists in particular, were splitters, precisely because they violently attacked Marx’s revolutionary theory, tried to force their own factional preachings on and conduct schismatic activities against the Marxists in the International. The revisionists of the Second International were splitters also because they rammed their own revisionist programmes down the throat of the workers’ parties, usurped the leadership of the International and opposed the Marxist-Leninists and the revolutionary struggles they led. The modern revisionists have betrayed Marxism-Leninism and the fundamental interests of the proletariat and the working people. They are bent on pushing ahead with their revisionist line and are doing all they can to split and disintegrate the socialist camp and disrupt the unity of the fraternal Parties. The chief of the modern revisionists is the No. 1, out-and-out splitter.

Integrating Universal Truths of Marxism-Leninism With Revolutionary Practice

All the three Internationals went through their own processes of birth, growth and dissolution. They played different historical roles under different historical conditions. But under conditions where the international communist movement has developed in depth and scope and where the revolutionary struggle in each country has become increasingly complex, such an organizational form as the Communist International, such centralized leadership for the international workers' movement, has become unnecessary and impossible.

The entire history of the international communist movement shows that as far as the Communist Parties of various countries are concerned, the most important thing is that they should be able to integrate the universal truths of Marxism-Leninism with the concrete practice in the revolution of their own countries, persist in the revolutionary line of Marxism-Leninism and carry out revolutionary struggles independently. The Parties following this line will be able to lead the revolutionary cause of the people in their own countries step by step to victory and make great contributions to the revolutionary cause of the international proletariat. And those Parties which fail to do this and especially those which just dance to the baton of revisionism, will only run into difficulties and bring setbacks and defeat to the revolutionary cause.

Today relations among fraternal Parties can only be those of independence, complete equality, mutual association and mutual support based on Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. Questions of mutual concern can only be settled by reaching unanimous agreement through consultation on the basis of equality. These principles governing relations between fraternal Parties have long been clearly stipulated in the 1957 Declaration and the 1960 Statement. Only by observing these principles can the unity among fraternal Parties be guaranteed and continuously strengthened. The danger of a split in the international communist movement brought on solely by the modern revisionists is also manifested in their crude violation of these norms, their imposition of the revisionist line on fraternal Parties, their wanton interference in the internal affairs of fraternal Parties and their various sabotaging and subversive activities against them. It is imperative to struggle resolutely against modern revisionism and splitism if the unity of the international communist movement is to be safeguarded.

The sparks of revolution kindled by Marx and Engels, the creators of the First International, have now developed into a world conflagration. The international communist movement has become an irresistible torrential tide promoting the steady advance of the cause of mankind's emancipation. Today, the socialist countries where the working class has won victory have formed the powerful socialist camp, Marxism-Leninism has spread to all continents and the majority of the countries in the world have Communist or Workers' Parties. The revolutionary Marxist-Leninist forces in various countries are growing stronger and the struggle of the people in the world, especially the national-liberation movements of the Asian, African and Latin American peoples, is surging forward with the power of a thunderbolt. In contrast, the imperialist bloc led by the United States is weakening rapidly and the ugly features of the modern revisionists who oppose revolution are fully exposed. They are becoming more and more isolated and finding things increasingly difficult as the days go by. Looking back on the past and looking ahead to the future, we see before us an excellent situation. Holding high the revolutionary banner of Marxism-Leninism and the banner of internationalist unity of the proletariat and leading the revolutionary people of the world, the revolutionary vanguard of the proletariat standing in the forefront of the struggle is bound to overcome all obstacles in the path of advance and carry forward the revolutionary cause started by the First International until final victory is achieved.

New Bonds of Friendship

— Prince Sihanouk's Fifth China Visit —

The just concluded fifth state visit by Cambodian Head of State Prince Norodom Sihanouk, which included attending National Day celebrations, was looked upon by the Chinese people as a new expression of the friendly relations existing between China and Cambodia.

While in Peking, Prince Sihanouk had very cordial and friendly talks with Chairman Liu Shao-chi and Premier Chou En-lai, and a joint communique was released on October 5. Signed by Chairman Liu and the Cambodian Head of State, it declared that the leaders of the two countries held identical views on all the questions discussed, including the current international situation—the Indo-China situation in particular, and that both desired to further develop relations of friendly co-operation between China and Cambodia.

In the communique both sides strongly condemned the U.S. imperialists' violation of the 1954 and 1962 Geneva agreements and their intensified aggression against Cambodia, Laos and Viet Nam. They pointed out that the question of Indo-China could be settled only by the convocation of a meeting of the countries concerned with the Geneva agreements. They warned that if U.S. imperialism insisted on going its own way and extended the flames of war, it would in the end reap what it sowed. (See below.)

The communiqué also manifested the comradeship-in-arms between the two peoples in their common struggle against imperialism. The Chinese side thanked Prince Sihanouk for his just stand in repudiating the slanders and calumnies heaped on China by imperialism and its followers; the Cambodian side thanked the Chinese people for its full support for Cambodia’s fight to defend its sovereignty and territorial integrity.

The joint communiqué reiterated their support for the final communiqué of the Second Afro-Asian Conference preparatory meeting in Djakarta last April.

Both parties expressed the hope that the Second Conference of Non-Aligned Countries in Cairo would contribute to the cause of opposing imperialism, old and new colonialism, supporting the movements for national independence and defending world peace.

Renmin Ribao in its October 6 editorial spoke highly of the joint communiqué, describing it as “a new chapter in Sino-Cambodian friendly relations and the crystallization of a militant friendship between the Chinese and Cambodian peoples in their fight against imperialism.”

After signing the joint communiqué, Prince Sihanouk presented the Chinese leaders with medals of honour: the Order of the Grand Medal of Independence for Chairman Liu Shao-chi and Premier Chou En-lai; the Grand Cross of the Royal Order of Cambodia for Vice-Chairmen Soong Ching Ling, Tung Pi-wu and Chairman Chu Teh of the N.P.C. Standing Committee. Others who received Cambodian medals were Peng Chen, N.P.C. Standing Committee Vice-Chairman and Mayor of Peking; Vice-Premiers Ho Lung and Chen Yi; and Chang Han-fu, Vice-Foreign Minister.

Prince Sihanouk said that he presented the medals in the name of the Khmer people and the Cambodian Government. He thanked the Chinese leaders, Government and people for their friendship and support to the Cambodian people. “We always stand by your side. The solidarity between us is unbreakable. U.S. imperialism can never separate Cambodia from China. We firmly oppose U.S. imperialism,” he stated. Chairman Liu Shao-chi thanked Prince Sihanouk, the Cambodian Government and people and declared: “Let us unite and support each other in the common struggle against U.S. imperialism.”

The Cambodian Head of State is also a music-lover. On the morning of October 5, he and his wife, accompanied by Premier Chou En-lai, visited the Central Conservatory of Music where a performance in honour of the Cambodian visitors was given by students and teachers. Included in the performance was the Cambodian Suite arranged by the conservatory according to a melody composed by Prince Sihanouk.

In the evening, Premier and Mme. Chou invited Prince and Mme. Sihanouk to dinner at their residence. Before dinner was served, Prince Sihanouk, in the name of the Queen of the Kingdom of Cambodia, presented Mme. Chou En-lai and Mme. Chen Yi with the Grand Cross of the Order of Her Majesty the Queen. He also presented medals for Mme. Mao Tse-tung, Mme. Liu Shao-chi, Mme. Chu Teh and Mme. Peng Chen which were received by Mme. Chou En-lai and Mme. Chen Yi on their behalf.

On October 6 Prince Sihanouk and his wife left Peking for home, via Kunming, carrying with them the profound friendship of the Chinese people. The Cambodian leader was seen off at the airport by Chairman and Mme. Liu Shao-chi, Chairman Chu Teh of the N.P.C. Standing Committee and Mme. Chu Teh, Premier and Mme. Chou En-lai, other senior government leaders, as well as thousands of Peking citizens.

In a written farewell speech issued at the airport the Cambodian Head of State said: “For us Cambodians, China is our No. 1 friend, and the No. 1 friend of all the peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America who are in a situation similar to ours and who share our aspirations and hopes.”

The Cambodian Head of State stressed that the Cambodian and Chinese peoples were not only friends but brothers-in-arms. “This solidarity, this determination to co-operate closely with you,” he added, “is shared by all the peoples of the world. We are certain that your final victory will also be ours.”

Prince Sihanouk and his party were accompanied by Vice-Premier Chen Yi on their Peking-Kunming flight.

(3) During their visit in China, Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and the other distinguished guests from Cambodia were accorded most warm and grand reception by the Chinese Government and people, which gave full expression to the fraternal fighting friendship between the peoples of China and Cambodia.

(4) In the course of the visit, Mao Tse-tung, Chairman of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, received Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and the other distinguished Cambodian guests and had cordial and friendly conversations with them.

(5) Chairman Liu Shao-chi and Premier of the State Council Chou En-lai of the People's Republic of China held talks with Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, Head of State of Cambodia, on the current international situation, particularly the situation in Indo-China, and the question of further developing the relations of friendship and co-operation between China and Cambodia. Also taking part in the talks on the Chinese side were: Tung Pi-wu, Vice-Chairman of the People's Republic of China; Chen Yi, Vice-Premier of the State Council; Chang Han-fu, Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs; Hong Shao-hui, Deputy Chief of General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; Chen Chung-ching, Vice-Chairman of the Commission for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries; Yang Lin, Vice-Chairman of the Commission for Economic Relations with Foreign Countries; Chen Shu-lu, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the People's Republic of China to the Kingdom of Cambodia; Yao Kuan, Director of the Second Department of Asian Affairs of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; and Tai Ping, Deputy Director of the Protocol Department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Also taking part in the talks on the Cambodian side were: Samdech Pennouth, Private Adviser to the Head of State; Prince Norodom Montana, Speaker of the Royal Council; Prince Sisowath Sirik Matak, Minister of State for National Education; Major-General Ngo Hou, Technical Adviser to the Head of State and Chief of Staff of the Royal Cambodian Air Force; Mr. Truong Cung, Cambodian Ambassador to the People's Republic of China; Mr. Ung Mung, First Vice-President of the National Assembly; Colonel Duong Sam OI, Vice-Chief of General Staff of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces; and Mr. Sarin Chhak, Minister-Counsellor of the Cambodian Embassy in France.

The talks were conducted in a most cordial and friendly atmosphere. The results of the talks showed that the two sides held agreed views on all the questions which had been discussed.

(6) Samdech Sihanouk expressed the warmest congratulations on the great achievements scored by the People's Republic of China in all the fields of its national construction in the 15 years since its founding and held that the growing might of the People's Republic of China was conducive to the defence of peace in Asia and the world.

The Chinese side warmly praised the heroic struggle waged by the Cambodian Government and people under the leadership of Samdech Sihanouk against aggression and interference by U.S. imperialism and its lackeys and in defence of state sovereignty and territorial integrity, and highly appraised the results achieved by the Kingdom of Cambodia in economic reforms and the development of its national economy after rejecting U.S. aid. The Kingdom of Cambodia resolutely pursues an independent foreign policy of peace and neutrality and upholds international justice and is playing an increasingly important role in the cause of safeguarding world peace.

The Cambodian side expressed profound thanks for the generous military aid rendered by the People's Republic of China to Cambodia in the latter's defence against imperialist aggression and for China's most valuable contribution to the efforts and sacrifices made by the Cambodian people in national construction, and particularly in industrialization.

(7) The leaders of the two countries expressed deep concern over the present grave situation in Indo-China. Both parties strongly condemned U.S. imperialism for its violations of the 1954 and 1962 Geneva agreements and its intensified criminal acts of aggression and intervention in Cambodia, Laos and Viet Nam. The United States and its lackeys have long been carrying on subversion, sabotage and armed provocation against the Kingdom of Cambodia, thus seriously jeopardizing its security. Having suffered repeated setbacks in southern Viet Nam, the United States is stepping up its preparations for extending the war and has carried out successive war provocations against Cambodia and the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam, with the result that the flames of war in Indo-China is in danger of spreading. All the peace-loving countries and people of the world must maintain high vigilance against this eventuality.

Both parties emphasized that the question of Indo-China could be settled only in accordance with the 1954 and 1962 Geneva agreements and through a conference of the countries concerned with them; no other way is of any avail. The attempt of U.S. imperialism to carry out aggression and intervention in Indo-China by means of the United Nations will surely meet with the resolute opposition of the peoples of Indo-China. Should U.S. imperialism continue to act wilfully and extend the flames of war, it would ultimately have to take the consequences of its own action.

The Chinese side reiterated the Chinese Government's resolute support for the proposal repeatedly put forward by the Government of the Kingdom of Cambodia for convening an international conference to ensure the independence, neutrality and territorial integrity of Cambodia. Both parties held that a conference of the 11 signatories to the Geneva agreements should be convened as quickly as possible to seek a peaceful solution of the Laosian question, and that the Co-Chairmen of the Geneva Conference are duty-bound to take active measures to promote the early convening of the conference. Both parties were of the view that the question of southern Viet Nam should be solved, without foreign interference, by the south Vietnamese people themselves through consultation in accordance with the provisions of the 1954 Geneva agreements and the will of the south Vietnamese people. The United States must withdraw all its troops, military personnel and military equipment from southern Viet Nam and dismantle all its military bases there. South Viet Nam must abide by the provisions in the Geneva agreements about non-participation in any military alliances so as to facilitate the peaceful reunification of Viet Nam.

The two parties stated that China and Cambodia would continue to co-operate closely with all the countries willing to see a peaceful solution of the Indo-China question, and work together with them for the relaxation of tension in this area.

(9) Both parties extended greetings to the Second Summit Conference of Non-Aligned Countries meeting in Cairo, and expressed the hope that this conference would contribute to the cause of opposing imperialism and old and new colonialism, supporting national-independence movements and safeguarding world peace.

The two parties expressed full support for the final communiqué of the Preparatory Meeting of the Second African-Asian Conference held last April in Djakarta, which meeting had laid a good foundation for the Second African-Asian Conference. Both parties expressed the firm belief that the Second African-Asian Conference scheduled to open in March next year in Algiers will carry forward and develop the Bandung spirit and make new contributions to the cause of opposing imperialism and old and new colonialism, winning and safeguarding national independence, developing national economy and national culture, promoting Asian-African solidarity and defending world peace.

(9) The two parties noted with great satisfaction that big advances had further been made in recent years in the relations of friendship and co-operation between China and Cambodia. Both the mutual support of the two countries in international affairs and their co-operation in the fields of economy and culture were closer than ever before; there were more and more contacts between the leaders of the two countries and friendly exchanges between the two peoples.

The Kingdom of Cambodia has consistently opposed the plot of "two Chinas" and actively demanded and worked for the restoration of the legitimate rights of the People's Republic of China in the United Nations. In particular, when the imperialists and their followers stirred up anti-Chinese campaigns, Samdech Norodom Sihanouk spoke out boldly for justice, solemnly refuted the slanders and calumnies against China and resolutely defended the friendship between China and Cambodia. The Chinese Government and people expressed their deep gratitude for this timely and forceful support.

The Cambodian side reaffirmed the resolute opposition of the Kingdom of Cambodia to the U.S. imperialist occupation of Taiwan. Taiwan is an inalienable part of China's territory and must be returned to China immediately and unconditionally.

The Chinese side reaffirmed that the Chinese people would continue to give unswerving support to the Cambodian people in their just struggle in defence of their country's sovereignty and territorial integrity and to oppose the aggression and interference by the U.S. imperialists and their lackeys against the Kingdom of Cambodia. China and Cambodia are friendly fraternal neighbours. In the event that the peace-loving Kingdom of Cambodia meet with foreign armed aggression, the 650 million Chinese people will give it all-out support and assistance.

In the name of the people, the Government and the State of Cambodia, Samdech Norodom Sihanouk expressed his deepest gratitude for the all-out support given by the People's Republic of China, its Government and the great Chinese people, which will greatly help safeguard the independence, neutrality and territorial integrity of the Kingdom of Cambodia and will accelerate the restoration of peace in Indo-China.

The Cambodian side expressed heartfelt thanks to the People's Republic of China for its unconditional support, which is strengthening Cambodian-Chinese solidarity in the struggle against imperialism.

(10) The Chinese leaders expressed their gratitude to Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, Head of State of Cambodia, and the other distinguished Cambodian guests for coming to attend the celebrations of the 15th anniversary of the founding of the People's Republic of China. The present visit of His Royal Highness the Prince has a great significance and far-reaching influence for further strengthening the relations of friendship and co-operation between China and Cambodia.

China and the Congo (B) Sign Friendship Treaty

WHEN President Alphonse Massamba-Debat of the Republic of the Congo (Brazzaville) arrived in China on Sept. 28 for a state visit at the invitation of Chairman Liu Shao-chi, the Chinese press, welcoming him editorially, predicted that his visit would forge a stronger link between the two countries. The publication of a joint communiqué by the Governments of China and the Congo (B) on October 3 has confirmed this. (See below.)

Expressing agreement of views on the question of developing friendly co-operation between the two countries and on international questions of common interest, the joint communiqué declared, among other things,

- China's firm support for the people of the Congo (B) in their heroic struggle against imperialist threats, interference and subversion;
- China's support and assistance to the Government and people of the Congo (B) struggling to carry forward their revolution and build their country;
- The Congolese (B) support for the restoration of China's legitimate rights in the U.N. and China's struggle for the liberation of its territory Taiwan and the Congolese (B) opposition to the imperialist plot to create "two Chinas";
- Both parties' support to the struggle for independence and freedom by those African peoples still under colonial domination and their condemnation of racial discrimination in South Africa and elsewhere;
- Both parties' readiness to take an active part in the 1965 Second Afro-Asian Conference.

On October 2, a treaty of friendship between China and the Congo (B) was signed in the Chinese capital by Chairman Liu Shao-chi and the Congolese President. The two Governments also concluded on the same day three other documents: agreements on economic and technical co-operation, on cultural co-operation and on navigation. This, as the joint communiqué stated, signified that "the relations of friendship and co-operation between China and the Congo (B) had entered a new stage and that the present visit of President Massamba-Debat to China had made an important contribution to the strengthening of the friendship and solidarity between the peoples of the two countries."

Concluded on the basis of the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence, the friendship treaty says explicitly that the two contracting parties undertake to respect each other's sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity. It affirms that the two countries, in the spirit of friendly co-operation, will develop their economic and cultural relations in accordance with the principle of equality, mutual benefit and non-interference in each other's internal affairs. Formal diplomatic relations between China and the Congo (B) were established only some six months ago, yet the relations of friendship and co-operation between the two countries have already made much satisfactory progress. Now such relations have been formalized in a treaty which will open up new and wider prospects for friendly co-operation.

The Renmin Ribao October 4 editorial, commenting on the President's visit and the signing of the treaty and the agreements, viewed the treaty "a major event," "a milestone" in the history of Sino-Congolese (B) friendship. It called the treaty "an important sign" marking the growing unity between the Chinese and African peoples.

While some of the Congolese President's party remained in China to continue their friendly visit, the President and the rest of his entourage left Peking on the morning of October 3. They were seen off at the airport by Chairman Liu Shao-chi; Vice-Chairman Tung Pi-wu; Chairman Chu Teh of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Premier Chou En-lai and other Chinese government leaders. Also bidding them farewell were thousands of Peking citizens.

Joint Communiqué of China and the Congo (B)

Following is the text of the joint communiqué of the Government of the People's Republic of China and the Government of the Republic of the Congo (Brazzaville), made public on October 3.—Ed.

At the invitation of Chairman Liu Shao-chi of the People's Republic of China, President Alphonse Massamba-Debat of the Republic of the Congo (Brazzaville) paid a state visit to China from September 28 to October 3, 1964. Accompanying him on the visit were Edouard Eboku-Biboukbas, Minister of Finance, Post and Telecommunications; Madame Alice Maboungou, Vice-Treasurer of the Political Bureau of the National Revolutionary Movement; Jean-Aime Makosso, Member of the National Assembly; Samuel Tehieambound, Member of the National Assembly; Martin Beri, Member of the National Assembly and First Vice-President of the Executive Committee of the Youth Organization of the National Revolutionary Movement; and other members of the delegation.

During their stay in China, President Massamba-Debat and his party, who visited Peking and Kunming, were accorded grand reception and warm welcome by the Chinese Government and people. This fully demonstrated the profound friendship existing between the peoples of China and the Congo (B).

President Massamba-Debat and all the other distinguished guests from the Congo (B) attended the celebrations of the 13th anniversary of the founding of the People's Republic of China and conveyed to the Chinese people the friendly greetings and warm congratulations of the people of the Congo (B).

Chairman Mao Tse-tung of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China received President Massamba-Debat and the other distinguished guests from the Congo (B) and held cordial and friendly conversations with them.

Chairman Liu Shao-chi and Premier of the State Council Chao En-lai of the People's Republic of China held sincere and friendly talks with President Alphonse Massamba-Debat of the Republic of the Congo (B) on the question of developing the relations of friendship and co-operation between the two countries and on international questions of common interest, and reached agreed views on the questions that had been discussed.

The two sides noted with great satisfaction that friendly co-operation between the two countries has developed rapidly in the political, economic and cultural fields since the establishment of diplomatic relations. They expressed the determination to work jointly to further consolidate and develop the friendship between the two countries.

The Chinese side highly praised the great victory of the August Revolution of the people of the Congo (B) and held that the August Revolution was not only an important mark of the further development of the national and democratic revolution in the Congo (B) but also a major event in the history of the African people's revolutionary struggles.

The Chinese side highly appraised the untiring effort and remarkable achievements made by the people of the Congo (B) under the leadership of President Massamba-Debat in opposing imperialism and old and new colonialism, safeguarding national independence and developing the national economy and culture. It expressed firm support for the people of the Congo (B) in their heroic struggle against the imperialists' threats, interference and subversion against the Congo (B) with the Congo (Leopoldville) as the base, and praised the just stand of the Government of the Congo (B) in pursuing a policy of peace, neutrality and non-alignment and supporting the national-liberation movements in Africa.

The Chinese side expressed deep sympathy with the people of the Congo (B) in the difficult position caused by the sabotage of the old and new colonialists and their lackeys and pledged to give vigorous support and assistance to the Government and people of the Congo (B) in their arduous struggle to overcome all the obstacles in the way of their advance, carry forward their revolution and build their country.

The Congolese side expressed appreciation of the Chinese Government's consistent pursuance of a foreign policy of peace; it expressed its support for the restoration of China's legitimate rights in the United Nations and the just struggle of the Chinese Government and people for the liberation of their own territory Taiwan as well as its opposition to the imperialist plot of creating "two Chinas."

Both sides held that the current international situation was most favourable for the people of all countries in their struggle against imperialism and old and new colonialism.

Both sides were greatly heartened by the great victories won by the national-liberation movements in Asia, Africa and Latin America, and held that the revolutionary struggles of the peoples of Asia, Africa and Latin America were a mighty force defending world peace in our time.

Both sides expressed firm support for those African peoples who are still under colonialist domination in their struggle for independence and freedom, and strongly condemned racial discrimination in South Africa and anywhere else.

Both sides extended greetings to the forthcoming Second Conference of Non-Aligned Countries and expressed the hope that it would make contributions to the cause of opposing imperialism and old and new colonialism, supporting the national-independence movements and safeguarding world peace.

Afro-Asian solidarity is a reliable guarantee of the victory of the common cause of the people of Asia and Africa, and the Bandung spirit is the unshakable basis of the solidarity and co-operation among the Asian and African countries. The two sides expressed full support for the final communiqué of the Preparatory Meeting of the Second African-Asian Conference and would take an active part in the Second African-Asian Conference scheduled to be held in Algeria in March 1965.

During the visit, the two sides signed the "Treaty of Friendship Between the People's Republic of China and the Republic of the Congo (Brazzaville)." the "Agreement on Economic and Technical Co-operation Between the Government of the People's Republic of China and the Government of the Republic of the Congo (Brazzaville)," the "Agreement on Navigation Between the Government of the People's Republic of China and the Government of the Republic of the Congo (Brazzaville)" and the "Agreement on Cultural Co-operation Between the Government of the People's Republic of China and the Government of the Republic of the Congo (Brazzaville)." This signified that the relations of friendship and co-operation between China and the Congo (B) had entered a new stage and that the present visit of President Massamba-Debat to China had made an important contribution to the strengthening of the friendship and solidarity between the peoples of the two countries.

"Indictment" Against Arrested Chinese In Brazil Denounced

by HSINHUA COMMENTATOR

The nine Chinese illegally detained in Brazil for more than five months were committed to trial by the Second Military Tribunal of Brazil's First Military District on September 4, despite strong condemnation by world public opinion. The "indictment" against them had been published by the Brazilian press two weeks earlier. It contained nothing but fabrications, forgery and trumped-up evidence. A commentary by Hsinahu commentator (September 28) follows. Subheads are ours. — Ed.

The nine Chinese personnel now on trial before a Brazilian military tribunal are being charged with trying to "start a mass revolution" and attempting to "change the [Brazilian] regime"—both crimes punishable under the Brazilian "State Security Act." These charges contained in the "indictment" to the Military Tribunal are trumped up and cannot hold water.

The "indictment" failed to give any evidence to substantiate the charges, and is therefore wholly untenable in itself.

The "indictment" lists some news dispatches sent out by the Hsinahu correspondents from Brazil about the possibility of the former Joan Goulart government entering into diplomatic relations with China, activities of political parties and social developments in Brazil, etc. It also mentions the Chinese trade personnel making arrangements for a commodity exhibition and carrying out Sino-Brazilian trade transactions. Does not all this prove that the pursuits of the Chinese were quite proper to their occupations as newsenmen and businessmen?

Apart from the interpreters, the other Chinese hardly know the language used in Brazil. How can they, nine in all, attempt to "start a mass revolution" and "change the [Brazilian] regime"? Can an established regime be easily changed by means of a few news dispatches or a trade exhibition?

Instead of answering such questions, the "indictment" alleged that the Chinese "developed Chinese communism with the covert co-operation of some accused Brazilians and with the overt co-operation of others," and that they "had several secret meetings with [Brazilian] Communists and among themselves." This, it said, "shows that they have a secret organ for intelligence" and "have conducted profound indoctrination to achieve the same end, that is, to change the [Brazilian] regime with the help of their country."

Fabrication Pure and Simple

All this is fabrication pure and simple. The material cited by the "indictment" in this respect is the printed matter found in the residence of the Chinese, that is, books and periodicals, which introduce New China to the world and which are easily obtained in bookstores. How could this become "incriminating evidence"?

The so-called co-operation with the Brazilians actually refers to contacts the Chinese had with the former. These contacts are natural and necessary for reporters covering news and trade personnel making preparations for an exhibition. They had entered into contacts with government officials as well as the public. Are such contacts forbidden by law?

How can the open and above-board professional pursuits of the Chinese be charged as espionage and how it can be said that the meetings they held among themselves "show that they have a secret organ for intelligence"? The world knows that indeed there are people who "helped" in changing the Brazilian regime, but they are not the Chinese. The "indictment," packed with stock political causticities against China and against the Communists, is devoid of any legal ground.

Let us look more deeply into the charge: which regime is meant by the "indictment" when it charges that the Chinese were attempting to "change Brazil's regime"? The nine Chinese arrived in Brazil when President Joao Goulart was in office. Wang Wei-cheng has been residing in Brazil for more than two years in conformity with Brazil's legal requirements. It was with the Brazilian Government's approval that Hou Fatseng went to prepare for an exhibition in Brazil. The written approval was published in Brazil's Government Gazette on June 12, 1961. Wang Yao-ting arrived in Brazil on January 14, 1964, for trade negotiations and preparations for the establishment of a representative's office of the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade in Brazil. He was arrested on April 3 before he could conclude any business transactions or complete the preparatory work for establishing the office. As they were granted the right to reside in Brazil by the Goulart government, why should they want to "change" the Goulart regime? It was after the coup d'état which overthrew the Goulart regime that the Chinese were thrown into prison. After their arrest, the Brazilian police announced that they had been under close surveillance and that their daily menu had not escaped police observation. How did it happen that then that the Goulart government knew nothing about the Chinese personnel's attempt to "change Brazil's regime"? And since such an attempt, if it existed, would be a danger to the Goulart government, why had not President Goulart expelled or arrested the Chinese but instead had al-owed them to reside in Brazil and invited them to dinner.

The 1953 Brazilian “State Security Act” invoked in the “indictment” was also in force when Goulart was in office. Why then did the Goulart government not accuse the Chinese of violating this act? If the Chinese were charged with attempting to “change” not the Goulart government but its successor, how could they possibly know beforehand that a new government was to be formed in Brazil? Moreover, since they were thrown into prison immediately after the coup, how could they have time to “change” the Brazilian regime? All this shows that the charges mentioned in the “indictment” are completely groundless.

Among the nine Chinese are newsmen who have been engaged in journalistic work for many years, trade personnel well known in trade circles of various countries, people whose job is to appraise the quality of cotton, and interpreters. To link up their normal pursuits with the political questions of Brazil is an obvious attempt to incriminate them falsely and a deliberate political persecution. The exhibition on China’s achievements in construction has been held in many countries in the world and has been highly praised. Before and after the coup d’état in Brazil, there were Chinese exhibitions in Mexico and Chile which were warmly welcomed by those attending. How can one claim that the regime of a country is decisively influenced by a foreign exhibition? Mexico and Chile remain what they are and what is there to be afraid of? Can nine Chinese “start” as they please a “mass revolution” to “change the established regime” in Brazil, a country with more than eight million square kilometers of territory and more than 70 million people? Is not such an assertion far too absurd?

The nine Chinese are foreign citizens residing in Brazil according to legal procedure. Although a coup d’état occurred, the Brazilian authorities should not arrest them groundlessly in violation of international good faith. This is a big mistake. The truth of the matter has become very clear but they are still under detention. This is one mistake on top of another. How can it escape condemnation by world public opinion?

The “indictment” also mentioned two trumped-up pieces of “evidence of crime”: a letter and a pistol. These were exposed long ago by world public opinion. Moreover, the journal Do Brasil published an article on July 12 revealing the letter to be a forgery. This can only prove that the U.S.-Chiang Kai-shek special agents have a hand in the frame-up which has nothing to do with the arrested Chinese.

Brazilian Authorities Should Correct Their Mistakes

More than five months have passed since the Brazilian authorities illegally arrested and detained the Chinese. The “indictment” produced after five months’ “investigation” is completely a fig of the imagination based on false evidence. This means that the Brazilian authorities themselves have proved that the arrest and detention of the Chinese were truly unjustified and their trial all the more could not hold water. The “indictment” itself amounts to announcing the innocence of the Chinese. The Brazilian authorities have no longer any reason to detain them but must immediately restore their freedom in accordance with the principles of international law. The Chinese people have always acted in accordance with the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence. We would like to see that the Brazilian authorities correct their mistakes and immediately release the nine arrested Chinese.

canal headworks and a main canal for irrigation purpose. Vice-Premier and Foreign Minister Chen Yi and Surya Bahadur Thapa, leader of the Government Delegation of the Kingdom of Nepal and Vice-Chairman of the Council of Ministers and Minister of Finance, Economic Planning, Law and Justice and Administrative Management, initiated the document for their respective countries. Premier Chou En-lai attended the ceremony.

Later at a luncheon given in honour of the Nepalese delegation, Vice-Premier Chen Yi warmly acclaimed Sino-Nepalese friendship which, he said, had excited the envy of the U.S. imperialists and their followers. Refuting the slanders fabricated by the U.S. imperialists in an attempt to sow dissension between the two countries, the Vice-Premier added: “Knowing the contemptible schemes and sinister tricks of these liars very well, we shall never be deceived. Contrary to their wishes, their lies have been exposed and Sino-Nepalese friendship has grown stronger.”

Vice-Chairman Thapa in his speech spoke warmly of the co-operation between the two countries and the economic aid China had given to Nepal. The new protocol, he said, “will greatly help the development of Nepal’s water conservancy and agricultural production.” He expressed confidence that the increasing contacts and meetings between the people of the two countries would strengthen and further promote their traditional friendship and good-neighbour relations.

That afternoon, Chairman Liu Shao-chi received Surya Bahadur Thapa and had a cordial and friendly talk with him.
China Strongly Protests Against Indian Troops’ Intrusions Into Chinese Territory

The Foreign Ministry of the People’s Republic of China sent a note to the Indian Embassy in China on September 28, 1964, strongly protesting against Indian troops crossing the China-Sikkim boundary and repeatedly making grave intrusions into China’s Tibet. The text of the note follows.—Ed.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People’s Republic of China presents its compliments to the Indian Embassy in China and has the honour to state as follows:

Having made repeated checking, the Chinese Government has recently confirmed that Indian troops have crossed the Tungchula Pass (southeast of the Natu La Pass) on the China-Sikkim boundary and intruded into China’s Tibet. Up to August 1964, Indian troops had successively built up 18 aggressive military structures (dug-outs, shelters, bulwarks, etc.) on the Chinese side of the above-mentioned pass or on the boundary line (11 on the Chinese side and 7 on the boundary line). The Indian troops entrenched there have engaged in incessant harassment. Besides, Indian troops have time and again intruded into China’s territory across other passes on the China-Sikkim boundary. On August 12, 1964, at about 14:00 hours, five Indian soldiers crossed the Tagi Pass on the China-Sikkim boundary and intruded into China’s territory for reconnaissance. On August 14, 1964, at about 15:00 hours, four Indian soldiers crossed the Pelungla Pass (west of the Tagi Pass) and intruded into China’s territory for reconnaissance. The Chinese Government hereby lodges a strong protest with the Indian Government against the above-mentioned grave intrusions by Indian troops.

As early as September 1962, Indian troops already crossed the China-Sikkim boundary, built up dozens of aggressive military structures on the Chinese side of the Natu La Pass and unlawfully entrenched themselves there, blocked the pass and interrupted normal traffic of border inhabitants. Disregarding the repeated protests of the Chinese Government, the Indian Government has up till now refused to withdraw its intruding troops or make a joint investigation by the two parties into the intrusion by Indian troops. Now, the Indian Government has further sent its troops to cross the Tungchula Pass, build up military structures there and repeatedly infringe on Chinese territory at other places on the China-Sikkim border. These iron-clad facts clearly demonstrate that the Indian Government, unreconciled to the relaxation of the Sino-Indian border situation due to the initiative measures of the Chinese side, is not only making repeated intrusions along the Sino-Indian border, but also extending its aggressive activities along the China-Sikkim border in order to create tension to meet the needs of its domestic and foreign policies.

It should be pointed out that the Indian Government and its propaganda organs have recently been pouring out abuses and groundlessly slandering China as “concentrating troops” and “building bases” along the China-Sikkim border, “penetrating deep into Sikkim,” etc. The purpose is evidently to provide a cover for India’s own aggressive activities and make anti-China propaganda. This trick of a thief crying “Catch thief!” which is often played by the Indian Government, will deceive nobody and will only be appreciated by U.S. imperialism and its followers.

In order to safeguard China’s territory and sovereignty and maintain tranquillity along the China-Sikkim border, the Chinese Government seriously urges India to put an immediate stop to its aggressive activities, dismantle all the military structures it has built up on Chinese territory and on the China-Sikkim boundary line and withdraw all its troops which are unlawfully entrenched on Chinese territory.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs avails itself of this opportunity to renew to the Indian Embassy the assurances of its highest consideration.
Shanghai—Growth of a Socialist Industrial Centre

by TSAO TI-CHIU*

Shanghai was before liberation and is today China’s major industrial centre. But a world of difference lies between the old and new. Then, its industry was imperialist dominated, typically semi-colonialist, lopsidedly developed and mainly dependent on imported equipment and technology.

Today Shanghai has become a well-integrated industrial centre with a very big range of products and a fairly powerful material and technical base; all its industrial enterprises are run by the people in the socialist way to serve their livelihood and socialist construction.

FIFTEEN years ago the Chinese People’s Liberation Army liberated Shanghai—one of the greatest metropolises of the world. The U.S. imperialists and reactionaries everywhere, hoping against hope and refusing to reconcile themselves to defeat, confidently predicted that “the Communists won’t be able to run Shanghai. They may be good at politics and fighting but they don’t know anything about economics. They won’t last three months in Shanghai.”

History, however, soon gave the lie to these prophets. Led by the Communist Party and Chairman Mao Tse-tung, the Chinese people not only cleaned up this “paradise for adventurers” physically and morally, but developed the city’s economy at a speed and on a scale unknown in its past, turning it into a new socialist city and New China’s powerful industrial centre.

The growth of Shanghai’s modern industry dates back to 1843 when the city was designated a “treaty port” and opened to foreign trade under the Treaty of Nanking, the first unequal treaty imposed by the imperialists on China in the wake of the Opium War. But at the time of liberation in 1949, the city’s industry was in a backward state as a result of long years of political and economic rule of imperialism, feudalism and bureaucrat-capitalism. What is more, the reactionary rule of the imperialists and their lackeys gave it a distinctly semi-colonial character.

In 1936, the year before the outbreak of the War of Resistance Against Japan, imperialist enterprises operated 60.3 per cent of the city’s cotton spindles, 70.9 per cent of the looms and 54.2 per cent of dockyard equipment; they accounted for 34.4 per cent of the cigarettes produced there. In the city’s lopsided economic structure light industry predominated; there was little heavy industry. Production techniques were backward. Most of the factories were small and poorly equipped; engineering works handled only repair and assembly jobs and were unable to design and manufacture products on their own.

Fundamental Change

With liberation Shanghai industry entered a new stage of development. The damage done by long years of war was repaired within three years. By 1952, industrial output topped the peak pre-liberation level. During the First Five-Year Plan (1953-57), the socialist transformation of capitalist industry and commerce and handicraft industry was in the main completed and a decisive victory was won for the socialist revolution on the economic front. Both light and heavy industry made big headway.

During the Second Five-Year Plan (1958-62) Shanghai’s industry, guided by the Communist Party’s general line for building socialism, expanded rapidly. This, together with the subsequent implementation of the policy known as “readjustment, consolidation, filling out and raising standards,” brought about a fundamental change in it.

During that five-year period, the technical transformation of existing plants went ahead at a rapid rate; much key equipment was acquired, greatly expanding their productive capacity. A number of new metallurgical, heavy machine-building, power-generating equipment, chemical fertilizer and other plants were built; they underpinned these important branches of industry. The building of these plants and the creation of new branches of industry filled up the gaps in Shanghai’s industrial structure and reinforced its material base. Many important raw materials which had to be imported in the past can now be obtained from local producers in sufficient quantities. Local factories now design and manufacture a wide range of large and precision machines which they could not make before. In the case of such important items as alloy steels, seamless steel tubes, metallurgical equipment, refrigerating equipment, artificial fabrics and antibiotics, Shanghai has doubled or increased output several times over. In some cases output has increased more than tenfold.

New Look of Shanghai’s Industry

These advances gave Shanghai’s major branches of industry a completely new look.

*The author is a Vice-Mayor of Shanghai.

1 The capitalist industrial and commercial enterprises switched over to joint state-private operation and came directly under the state plan. Handicraftsmen organized themselves in producers’ co-operatives.
Iron and Steel. The first open-hearth furnace in Shanghai was built by the imperial Ching Dynasty government in 1893. In the next half century, annual steel-making capacity was expanded to only 30,000 tons. Total steel-rolling capacity amounted to a puny 70,000 tons. Even this capacity was not fully utilized. Rolling mills were small; most rolls were less than 200 millimetres in diameter.

Shanghai today has been built into a fairly large centre of the steel industry that can produce hundreds of varieties of steel and thousands of types and specifications of forgings and rolled stock. A significant proportion of the steel products made in Shanghai consists of high-grade alloy steel products never before made there. Most of the rolled stock used there is locally produced.

Machine-Building. During the First Five-Year Plan, Shanghai engineering advanced from doing repair and assembly jobs to manufacturing small and medium-sized general equipment. During the Second Five-Year Plan, it expanded to produce large quantities of medium-sized as well as some large steel-making, steel-rolling, mining, chemical fertilizer and forging equipment in complete sets. It also developed such new products as precision machine tools, automobiles, tractors, precision instruments and meters, oil industry equipment and electronic apparatus.

In the past many major Shanghai products were copies of foreign models. Today they are Shanghai designed and manufactured. An increasing proportion of the new products developed each year is of Chinese independent design. The current ratio of such products to total production is three times what it was in 1957. The first-stage of the Wuching Chemical Works commissioned a year ago, with an annual capacity of 100,000 tons of ammonium sulphate, was one of the first of a number of large Chinese-built nitrogenous fertilizer plants designed in Shanghai. Its equipment was also made in that city and installed by its technicians and workers.

Chemical Industry. Sulphuric and nitric acids were manufactured in Shanghai as far back as 1867. But in all the more than 80 pre-liberation years, only some 50,000 tons of sulphuric acid were produced there.

Capacity for producing basic acids and alkalis was greatly expanded during the Second Five-Year Plan, and the output of many new products was developed. These included chemical fertilizers, insecticides, plastics, synthetic fibres, antibiotics, vitamins and high-grade dyestuffs. In plastics, only two simple products — bakelite powder and celluloid — were made in the past and from imported materials at that. Now the industry is turning out polyvinyl chloride, polystyrene, organic glass, polyethylene, organic silicon resin and ion-exchange resin.

Light Industry. There has been a big increase in the output of articles of daily use and their quality has vastly improved. New branches of light industry have been established; they produce cameras, watches, plastic goods, photo-sensitive films, and chemical fibre fabrics. Many new products have been developed as well as old products with new designs and patterns. Only 16- and 42-count yarns were made before liberation. Today fine cotton yarns of 30-, 100- and 120-count make up an increasing proportion of the yarns produced. In addition, a newly developed combed yarn and fabrics made of chemical fibres are supplied to urban and rural consumers and exported in large quantities.

More Rational Industrial Structure

The structure of Shanghai's industry has also been rationalized. The proportion of heavy industry rose from 13.6 per cent in 1949 to around 50 per cent in 1962; the ratio of industries making raw materials increased from 6.1 per cent to 23.1 per cent over the same period. Increased production of the manufactured raw materials has given an impetus to the processing industries. The proportion of light industrial products made from metals, chemicals and other industrially made raw materials rose from 38.3 per cent in 1957 to 60.5 per cent in 1962. That was why Shanghai's light industrial production kept expanding despite shortages of agricultural raw materials during the 1959-61 period when the nation's farms were hit by serious natural disasters for three years in a row.
The establishment of new branches of industry has made Shanghai's industrial system more comprehensive. It is now turning out more than 100,000 kinds and specifications of products and its capacity for making complete sets of equipment grows steadily.

Rapid Growth of Science and Technology

Rapid industrial growth makes new demands on science and technology; the advance of the latter, in its turn, promotes industrial development. Since liberation, there has been a big increase in the numbers of scientific research institutions and their personnel in Shanghai. Their scientific and technical level has risen swiftly. The mass of workers and staff, led by the Party and Government, have shown a fine spirit of enterprise in thought and action and a stubborn revolutionary determination in overcoming difficulties in research and efforts to introduce technical innovations. They have launched a vigorous movement for scientific experiments. Research personnel, working in close cooperation with workers and staff, have completed many important research projects that are in the van of domestic achievements and approach international standards. They have helped popularize many efficient new techniques and processes.

Shanghai has also trained a large number of new scientific and technical personnel. The city's industrial enterprises and allied departments in the Second Five-Year Plan period had 70 per cent more technical personnel than in the First Five-Year Plan period. Tens of thousands of outstanding workers were trained in a planned way to the technical level of technicians or engineers. By the end of 1962, no less than 38 per cent of the technical personnel in industry were workers promoted from the rank and file.

Rapid post-liberation growth has enabled this veteran industrial centre to give most effective support to the nation's socialist construction. During the Second Five-Year Plan, Shanghai sent one-third more skilled manpower to other parts of the country than it did during the First Five-Year Plan. It also delivered large quantities of goods and equipment. Compared with the First Five-Year Plan, the amounts of rolled steel, turbo-generators, bicycles and sewing machines that went out from Shanghai to other places in the Second Five-Year Plan soared 3.9, 9.3, 2.5 and 3.1 times respectively. Foreign exports of Shanghai manufactured goods went up 80 per cent over the same period. The amount of capital accumulated for the state rose 2.4-fold.

Victory for General Line

Shanghai’s phenomenal industrial growth after liberation and especially during and after the Second Five-Year Plan is a victory for the correct leadership of the Communist Party and Chairman Mao Tse-tung and for the Party’s general line for building socialism. It is also the result of a heroic effort on the part of Shanghai’s working class, united and working hard to bring prosperity to the country.

In 1958, the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party and Chairman Mao Tse-tung laid down the general line of going all out, aiming high and achieving greater, faster, better and more economical results in building socialism. This general line is a scientific summation of the Chinese people’s experience in building socialism; it reflects in a concentrated way their urgent desire to shed China’s economic and cultural backwardness. It is a key that releases the wisdom and energy of the mass of the people—a spiritual force grasped by the people and thereby turned into an immense material force propelling the national economy forward.

Shanghai workers have proved that it is quite possible to achieve greater, faster, better and more economical results in building socialism as called for by the general line. In addition to building new projects to fill up gaps and round out its industrial system, Shanghai renovated and expanded its old enterprises so as to make full use of existing facilities. The addition of a few items of necessary new equipment at relatively small cost resulted in a considerable expansion of capacity. Workers and staff of some small, poorly equipped factories designed and built new equipment themselves and succeeded in turning out large or precision products with little new investment. The Yongxin Seamless Tube Mill is a case in point. It used to be a small “back-alley” factory. But after improving their equipment, Yongxin workers are now mass-producing precision seamless tubes with irregular shapes.

Shanghai increased its industrial production by raising labour productivity rather than by employing more manpower. Overall labour productivity during the Second Five-Year Plan period was 57 per cent above the First Five-Year Plan level. On this basis, living standards of workers and staff have been steadily improved and large sums have been accumulated for speeding up the nation’s socialist construction.

Role of Policy of Readjustment

Shanghai expanded the capacity of its basic industries many fold and laid down a fairly powerful material and technical base thanks to three consecutive years of rapid growth from 1958 to 1960. In 1961 Shanghai, like other parts of the country, began implementing the general policy of readjustment, consolidation, filling out and raising standards” (see Peking Review, 1964, No. 11).

The facts outlined earlier show that implementation of these policies in the past three years and more has resulted in consolidation of the achievements made during the years of rapid growth, further strengthening of the material and technical base of Shanghai industry, a considerable increase in its ability to support agriculture, and especially in a great extension in the range of products made, big improvements in their quality, and a greater harmony among the various divisions of industry as well as among the various branches of the national economy. Today, the economic situation in Shanghai, as elsewhere in the country, is steadily improving. A new industrial upsurge is shaping up and developing.

Self-Reliance

Shanghai's rapid industrial growth also testifies to the vitality of the Communist Party's policy of building the country by self-reliance. During the Second Five-Year Plan, many new products were manufactured and new projects built without the help of foreign experts or foreign technical data. This was made possible by raising the masses, freeing their minds of restricting ideas and encouraging them to think and act boldly, to make scientific experiments and surmount all material and technical difficulties.

Shanghai's automobile industry was developed in this way. The plant mass producing 4-ton lorries today was a simple auto-repair factory 15 years ago employing only 20 people and three sets of hand tools. After liberation, its workers and staff resolutely refused any longer to be tied to this backward technology. "We've been doing repairs for dozens of years and all the automobiles we fixed were imported." They said, "Now that we have achieved liberation under the leadership of the Communist Party, we must liberate our factory as well and make autos ourselves." After a year's endeavours in 1958 with leading cadres, technical personnel and rank and file working in close co-operation they successfully trial manufactured their first lorry. Today the plant employs more than 800 people, has 580 machine tools and is designing and manufacturing autos on its own.

A host of facts have proved that the people must rely chiefly on their own efforts in building socialism. China has rich resources and the Chinese working class has lofty aspirations. Once the wisdom and creative ness of the masses are brought into full play, all difficulties can be overcome and it is certain that they will be able to build an independent, prosperous and strong socialist country.

Socialist Co-operation

Extensive socialist co-operation also played an important part in Shanghai's swift industrial advance. When the metallurgical industry was being energetically developed in 1958, not a single factory in the city had ever been able to make complete sets of metallurgical equipment nor had any plant processed large equipment for the metallurgical industry. So the city authorities organized a close-knit co-operative effort of more than 1,000 factories making metallurgical equipment, machine tools, power-generating equipment and other items: Large and small factories, light and heavy industrial plants, factories making key equipment and those making accessories all worked closely together. In this way, by the second half of 1958 the city was turning out a great number of large and medium-sized blast furnaces, steel converters, rolling mills and other metallurgical equipment with an aggregate annual capacity of millions of tons of iron and steel and hundreds of thousands of tons of rolled stock. It was a greater amount of equipment than the total made in Shanghai from liberation up to 1958.

Such large-scale co-operation is possible only under socialism. In Shanghai it helped to tap production potentials deeply and create new productive power; it helped economize funds for construction and made it possible to organize all available forces on a large scale for the successful accomplishment of great construction tasks.

Mass Movements

In production and construction, as in class struggle, man, his ideological awakening and his initiative are the decisive factor. The reason is simple: everything has to be done by people. The gigantic undertaking of building socialism cannot be accomplished by a few individuals; it is a cause of the millions. Shanghai industry's rapid advance is a result of fully relying on the masses, bringing the sense of responsibility of the working class as masters of the country into full play and constantly developing the mass revolutionary movement. In the movement for technical revolution and technical innovations, Shanghai workers improved their equipment and technological processes and succeeded in greatly raising both their output and the general technical level; they mechanized or semi-mechanized production processes in many enterprises, and did all this without the state having to make any considerable investment.

The Shanghai Alcohol Distillery provides a typical example of such mass ingenuity. Its workers and staff members mechanized the preparation of raw materials, mashing and transport, and introduced new, continuous processes for saccharification and cooking in a very short time and with a minimum of new investment carried their plant's alcohol output in 1962 to ten times what it was in 1949. In the process labour productivity rose 16.8-fold and costs dropped more than 40 per cent.

Many such facts indicate that the basic way to build socialism at high speed, the key to implementation of the general line for building socialism as well as an effective and speedy method for bringing our science and technology up-to-date, is by mobilizing the masses for action.

Such is a brief account of the development of Shanghai's industry. It is a record of the application of revolutionary, Marxist-Leninist principles that has resulted in rapid progress. A great deal of valuable experience has been gained in the course of this socialist construction. Using that experience and firmly adhering to the policies of the Chinese Communist Party that have proved so successful, Shanghai's working people are forging ahead to build their city into an advanced industrial, scientific and technological base for their country.

U.S. War in Indo-China

"Hot Pursuit" Subterfuge

Washington has made another open move to accelerate its encroachment against the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam and extend the war in Indo-China. The move is a sequence to the U.S.S. September 18th fabrication of a new "incident" in the Gulf of Bac Bo (Gulf of Tonkin). The Johnson Administration, according to Washington's "authoritative sources," has authorized U.S. warplanes "to penetrate Red Chinese or North Vietnamese airspace in pursuit of any communist aircraft attacking American naval vessels in the Gulf of Tonkin." Agency reports say that U.S. forces have also been given the green light to pursue what are called "their attackers" into "enemy territory beyond the 12-mile territorial limit claimed by the communists."

This is out-and-out war-mongering by the U.S. imperialists. What they are clamouring about now is the application of the "doctrine of hot pursuit." Stripped of all sophistry, "hot pursuit" by U.S. aircraft means nothing less than violation of the sovereignty of another country at will. It is a "doctrine" by which the Johnson Administration seeks to launch open aggression and escalate the war in Southeast Asia.

To begin with, so-called patrol and reconnaissance activities which U.S. naval vessels have been carrying out in the Gulf of Bac Bo thousands of miles away from U.S. shores are aggressive enough, and as such have been condemned by world public opinion as serious war provocations against the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam. The fact that U.S. warplanes in the Indo-China region are now under orders to intrude into the airspace of China and the D.R.V. means that the Johnson Administration is bent on still more adventurous and dangerous aggression in this part of Asia.

Of late the White House has been trying out a series of pretexts to push its war moves in Southeast Asia in a vain attempt to break its south Viet Nam impasse. It has scarcely tried to conceal this intention. At his September 21 news conference the U.S. President said: "Who can say when a crisis will come up? There might be one tomorrow." He has created one by putting U.S. military aircraft under orders to invade the D.R.V. and China.

Laotian Tripartite Talks

Who Blocked Agreement?

Although the United States was not represented at the Paris meeting of the three Laotian factions, its meddling hand was ever busy, pulling the wires both at the formal sessions at Chateau de la Celle Saint Cloud and during the earlier informal discussions. Hence the failure to reach any substantive agreement.

The Neo Lao Haksat delegation headed by Prince Souphanouvong had gone to Paris with concrete proposals and with great hopes. It was ready to discuss the restoration of the government of national union and the composition of a unified Laotian delegation to the Geneva conference. At one stage during the preliminary talks, it proposed that troops of the three factions disengage and return to their positions as of June 24, 1962—the day when the ceasefire order was issued after the signing of the 1962 Geneva agreements—and expressed readiness to help bring about a rapprochement between General Kung Le's troops and the genuine neutralist forces on the basis of real neutrality.

This, however, was rejected by the Rightists who, along with Prince Souvanna Phouma, insisted on the so-called "neutralization" and "policing" of the Plain of Jars by the forces of the three factions. The Neo Lao Haksat could not agree as this was a clear cover for infiltration and eventual occupation of the area by the Rightists. Nor could the Neo Lao Haksat recognize the legality of the present Vientiane government, "reorganized" at the dictate of the April 19 coup group and in violation of the Zurich and Plain of Jars agreements. Since Prince Souvanna Phouma insisted on the "neutralization" of the Plain of Jars as a precondition for reconvening the 14-nation Geneva conference, there could be no agreement.

Washington, of course, is only too happy with this result. Egging on its followers to raise impossible preconditions, the Johnson Administration had at the same time instigated them to step up military attacks. These tactics were used both before and during the Paris talks to block the Geneva conference and escape world condemnation. As revealed in a recent article in the New York Times, "The United States has never felt that it could oppose all talks, Souvanna Phouma's posture—that he's willing to meet at any time, as soon as his preconditions are met—is the proper one. That way, the onus is on the other side," while "a Geneva conference seems far off."

Soviet Arms Aid to India

A Real Eye-Opener

In his monthly broadcast to the nation on October 1 President Ayub Khan of Pakistan once again referred to the large-scale military assistance the Soviet Union is giving India. He said this military buildup, coming on top of the massive arms aid pledged to India by the Western powers, was of the gravest import to Pakistan. He pointed out that India had been exploiting its border dispute with China by distracting attention from the danger of renewed attack by China.

The agreement for the supply of Soviet military equipment to India was signed in September. Some details of the deal have since appeared in the Indian press. The Patriot said the Soviet Union would deliver 44 Mig fighters to India in October and November and arrange for 60 more to be assembled in India beginning in 1965. India would also receive 100 light tanks. The Times of India disclosed that the Soviet aid programme included missiles, transport aircraft, and submarines. Jubilant over this generosity, it added, "the Soviet military assistance to India might easily equal, if it does not exceed, the American arms aid programme. Politically, too, the Soviet Government is placing no restrictions on the use of this equipment."

Indian Defence Minister Chavan dotted the 'i's and crossed the 't's when questions were put to him in the Indian parliament about the provisions of the Soviet-Indian military assistance agreement. Asked whether India could use the Soviet Migs and tanks "against China," he replied, "Of course we can. Otherwise why are we taking it?" He also told the M.P.'s that in his talks with Khrushchov and other Soviet leaders they recognized the need for the strengthening of India's defence potential. The Times of India reported that in the debate following Chavan's speech there was even a proposal that the United States, the Soviet Union and India should "join hands to launch a campaign against China."

This idea of an "unholy alliance" underlines the recent statement made by Senator Hubert Humphrey, Lyndon Johnson's presidential running mate, who suggested that there should be "a coalition of Asian powers with India as its main force to counterbalance Chinese power," a pernicious suggestion that has been denounced by the press throughout Pakistan. The Pakistan Times rightly emphasizes the serious consequences arising from the massive flow of arms into India from the Soviet Union and the U.S. imperialists. The Soviet Union, it said, was apparently supplementing the imperialist diplomacy of the West to build up Indian military strength. It added: "Soviet-U.S. military collusion in India should serve as an eye-opener for the Afro-Asian nations."

Manila Demonstration

"We Want Economic Freedom"

Manila witnessed on October 2 one of its biggest demonstrations against the United States in months. Three thousand workers and students assembled before the American Embassy demanding abrogation of the Laurel-Langley trade agreement and the "parity rights." Under the latter, Americans in the Philippines enjoy special privileges which allow them to exploit the country's natural resources. The demonstrators carried placards reading "We want economic freedom!" and "U.S. advisers are C.I.A. agents." They then marched to the presidential palace and handed protest manifestos to President Macapagal, who was leaving for Washington on a state visit the next day.

During the past few months the demand for re-examination of the Philippines' economic and military pacts with the United States has become more and more articulate. Some Congressmen, worried about the use of Clark Field air base by the Americans in their military adventures in Asia, sought its dismantling. The demonstrators have now called for an end to the economic grip which American capitalists have on the country. Columnist Soliongo, writing in the Manila Chronicle on October 2, condemned the United States for fleecing the Filipinos and urged his countrymen to resist American pressure. He said that in the Philippines "it is the Americans who wield real political and economic power" and that this is used at the expense of the national interests of the Filipino people.

One More Spark

Guerrilla War in Colombia

One more spark has been thrown into the Latin American tinder-box. This time it comes from Colombia. There, in the high Andes, particularly in the Marquetalia region which is on the border between Tolima and Huila Provinces, armed peasants have risen against the latifundists, set up their own government and organized their own guerrilla army. Holding out against numerous punitive expeditions, they have gone on to draft an agrarian programme for land distribution and protection of the oppressed Indian communities. A recent statement issued by guerrilla commander Manuel Marulanda and other peasant leaders pointed out that because reactionary violence has blocked the peaceful, legal path, "We are forced to take another road: the revolutionary way of seizing state power through armed struggle."

Like their neighbours in Venezuela, the Colombian guerrillas are having to fight both the domestic reactionaries—the latifundists and their political representatives in Bogota—and the Yankee imperialists. Recently, they weathered a Pentagon-directed mopping-up campaign launched against them by 20,000 government troops and inflicted considerable casualties on the enemy. The latter were supported by U.S. aircraft which used terror bombing tactics. Washington was reported to have allotted U.S. $18 million for the operation, but as it turned out, the Pentagon experts with their helicopters and other special warfare paraphernalia were no match for peasants with guns.

Exploitation breeds revolution. Where there is armed repression, there is bound to be popular armed struggle. In Latin America this revolutionary truth was proved by Cuba. Then came Venezuela, Guatemala and Nicaragua. Now Colombia provides another example.

THE PASSING SHOW

From Cradle to Slag Heap

The modern capitalist "welfare state" is supposed to care for its people from the "cradle to the grave." U.S. capitalism makes a slight amendment to this. Labour Secretary Willard Wirtz has announced that the U.S. has "an acute problem of unemployment among all young people." Unemployment rate among the sixteen- to twenty-one-year-olds is 12 per cent regardless of race and 25 and 33 per cent among Negro boys and girls respectively. He envisaged a situation in which boys and girls would be "piling up at a rate of about 200 thousand to a quarter of a million a year," "coming into the labour market unprepared, unable to find jobs and making a human slag heap."
Entertainments

Peking Festivities

The capital's artists and entertainers combined their efforts to make New China's 15th anniversary a most memorable one artistically. Never before has the revolutionary spirit of the Chinese people been so fully reflected in a festive programme of songs and dances, operas and plays, films and exhibitions as it has been this National Day.

"The East Is Red"

An outstanding theatrical spectacle is the new pageant in song and dance, The East Is Red. Three thousand people perform in this remarkable effort of artistic synthesis.

The theme is the history of the Chinese people's revolution from the founding of the Chinese Communist Party in 1921 up to the present. The key episodes of the various stages of the revolution are highlighted in eight acts. They vividly reflect the great role Mao Tse-tung's thought plays in China's revolution and construction.

The 50 song and dance compositions of this epic are framed in music and linked by a poetic commentary. The mood is set by the theme songs — the widely popular revolutionary songs and music of those days. The dances, music and mime, richly national in colour, tell the story of the heroes of the times. They include many of the outstanding songs and dances of China's many nationalities.

It is a magnificently mounted and organized spectacle, inspiring in its revolutionary ardour and sweep of conception.

The prologue is an impressive choral rendering of the song The East Is Red. On the stage a huge sunflower, formed of dancers with fans, face the rising sun. There is a saying in China — “the sunflower seeks the rays of the sun; the people's hearts are turned towards the Communist Party.” This is the era of Mao Tse-tung. The dancers break from their sunflower pattern into a joyous dance.

But the Chinese people have not forgotten the past. The stage darkens, the scene is in Shanghai: a U.S. gunboat is moored in the Whangpoo; on its banks burdened dockers stagger under the gangbosses' whiplashes; on the street a weeping peasant woman sells her child. . . . These were the years when the Chinese people groaned under the triple yoke of imperialism, feudalism and bureaucratic-capitalism.

The Party Founded

The salvos of the October Revolution roll out like thunder from the north. The shining banners of Marxism-Leninism illumine the stage. The Communist Party of China is founded. The masses rise against the forces of reaction. They dance in the joy of a first freedom.

The joy is shortlived. Chiang Kai-shek betrays the revolution. Martyrs go heroically to their death. But the revolution cannot be quenched. The shots of the Nanchang Uprising ring out the first signal: the Autumn Harvest Uprising led by Comrade Mao Tse-tung kindles the first spark — of the armed revolution of the workers and peasants led by the Communist Party. With a myriad torches, serpentining through the gloom, dancers portray the spread of the prairie fire of the revolution ignited by that spark. As a baritone sings Chairman Mao's famous poem Chingkang Mountain set to music, the red flag is raised over that historic first revolutionary armed base. The Workers' and Peasants' Red Army is formed. The people rejoice as they overthrow the landlords and divide the land. The power of the workers, peasants and soldiers is proclaimed.

The revolution is at high tide — but opportunists in the Party are steering it towards the rocks. Comes the Tsunyi Conference (1935) and it disperses the threatening clouds. Chairman Mao's leadership, which puts China's revolution on the correct path, is established.

The Red Army is on its epic 25,000-li Long March. To the swirling notes of the music, it reaches the turbulent Tatu River. In a dance which makes effective use of the superb leaps and somersaults of traditional opera, the dancers recapture the scene of forcing the crossing of the Tatu on the bare iron chains of the Luting Bridge. They enact the meetings with the national minority peoples, and the passage through the Grasslands. This heroic chapter concludes with the words of Chairman Mao’s poem The Long March in song:

The Red Army fears not the trials of a distant march;
To them a thousand mountains, ten thousand rivers are nothing... .

The demand to resist Japanese aggression spreads throughout the nation. Refugees from the Northeast tell their tragic story in the words of the famous National Salvation March. The centre of the resistance movement is established in Yan’an. The best sons and daughters of China sing as they march off to fight the invaders. Soldiers and villagers, with one hand on the gun and the other on the hoe, turn desolate Nannivian into a fertile granary. Self-reliant, the Communist-led resistance bases consolidate their strength.

The surging notes of Hsien Hsing-hai’s Yellow River Cantata—The wind is howling, the horses are neighing, the Yellow River roars in anger, the Yellow River roars in anger... —the Eighth Route and New Fourth Armies rout the Japanese invaders.

“Liberate All China!”

Victory over Japan is hardly won before Chiang Kai-shek attacks the Liberated Areas and plunges the nation into civil war again. The C.P.C. and Chairman Mao issue the historic call: “Down with Chiang Kai-shek! Liberate all China!”

In a series of sweeping, whirling, tumbling motions of great beauty, the dancers represent the victorious crossing of the Yangtze by a “million stalwart troops” of the People’s Liberation Army. The hated flag atop the Presidential Office in Nanking is torn down. The Chiang dynasty has been toppled!

The tumultuous joy surging through the nation at the birth of the People’s Republic is recaptured in a series of jubilant dances before the Tien An Men Gate by the people of China’s many nationalities.

Into this jubilation a grim note is struck: the U.S. aggressors light the flames of war in Korea. To the song March of the C.P.V., Chinese Volunteers fight side by side with the Korean People’s Army to drive out the aggressors. In the era of socialism in China, the icy mountains of Tibet can no longer shut out the sun. A million serfs shake off thousand-year-old fetters and lift their voices in the song of emancipation. Dances of steelworkers, commune peasants in their fertile fields, of the P.L.A. and people’s militia, standing guard over the motherland, picture the Chinese people taking great strides forward in building socialism.

In the grand finale, the massive choir sings the songs Workers of All Lands, Unite! and People of the World, Unite! The stage becomes a pageant of the people of all lands marching forward arm in arm.

The performance enlisted the aid of many of the leading names in music, singing, dancing, poetry, acting, stage production and decor in China. A thousand and five hundred amateurs also took part; they came from dozens of universities, middle schools and factories in the capital.

The grandeur, spirit and artistry of the two-and-a-half-hour performance is a vivid demonstration of the achievements of Chinese music, song and dance in becoming revolutionary, national and popular.

Kaleidoscope of Attractions

October 3 was a red-letter day for ballet in China. It saw the premiere of The Red Detachment of Women, produced by the Ballet Troupe of the Central Modern Opera and Dance-Drama Theatre, in which for the first time in a full-length ballet, the heroic image of the labouring people and the revolutionary fighters of China was portrayed, and with ringing success. The libretto, adapted from the film of the same name, features a dramatic incident from the revolutionary struggles on Hainan Island in the 1930s. Techniques of the ballet have been well integrated with the new content. Elements of the characteristic movements of traditional Chinese opera and folk dance have also been introduced. It is a ballet with a distinctive Chinese national colour.

Peking opera, whose revolutionary transformation was signaled by the recent festival of Peking operas on contemporary revolutionary themes, offers half a dozen festival hits for the National Day programme. These include some of the best examples of the new operas: Spark Amid the Reeds, Raid on the Tiger Regiment, By the Chienkuan River, Hung Sao, and others.

Operas and Plays

The fruitful stays of playwrights and artists in factories, farms and army units—the grassroots of socialist life—have yielded a crop of new plays on contemporary revolutionary themes. Among them, attention is being attracted by The Spirit of the Dragon Horse, Two Sisters of a Mountain Village, Before the Wedding, all about life and struggles in today's countryside.

Special mention must be made of Letters From the South, a drama produced by the P.I.A. Army Ensemble. This is on a theme which is close to the hearts of the Chinese people—the south Vietnamese people's heroic fight against the U.S. imperialists and their south Vietnamese lackeys. The Chinese playwrights took their story from the two volumes of Letters From the South published in the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam and now appearing in a Chinese edition that has been widely read.

In a new full-length dance-drama, Ode to Eight Heroines, Chao Ching, the famous ballerina who starred in Magic Lotus Lantern, and her colleagues tell a true story of the war against the Japanese invaders: the heroic death of eight women soldiers of the Northeast Anti-Japanese Allied Army who, having fought to their last bullet, finally threw themselves into the Moutanchiang River rather be taken prisoner. The P.I.A. Air Force Ensemble's new modern opera production of Chiang Chieh brings to this stage that famous woman Communist from the popular revolutionary novel Red Cray.

Films and Exhibitions

Over 20 new feature films, documentaries and cartoons are showing. The Serf is a powerful, realistic film about what it meant to be a serf in old Tibet. The leading role is acted by one who knows of this only too well—Wongdi, a former serf himself. Wongdi and the rest of the Tibetan cast belong to the first group of stage talents from Tibet to be trained in Shanghai after the abolition of serfdom in 1959. In this their first film, they act like veterans. A Family Problem written by worker-author Hu Wan-chun is a story about educating the younger generation of workers; written in a light vein it nevertheless touches on problems that are full of significance for contemporary youth. Those who missed the stage hits On Guard Beneath the Neon Lights, The Siege, Never Forget and Youth in a Faraway Place, can now enjoy them in screen adaptations.

Two big art exhibitions give a good opportunity to see the progress Chinese artists and handicraftsmen have made in portraying contemporary revolutionary themes. The North China Art Exhibition at the Museum of Chinese Art is the first of a scheduled series of large comprehensive exhibitions covering different areas of China. It displays 453 works of practically every genre of art. These come from the four areas of Shansi Province, the Inner Mongolian Autonomous Region, Hopei Province and the Peking municipality. Inner Mongolia is distinguished by its oil paintings this year; Peking for its sculptures, Shansi and Hopei for their New Year pictures from famous folk art centres. When this exhibition concludes on October 25, others from the northeast, northwest, east, southwest and central-south China areas will follow.

The national industrial handicrafts exhibition in Beihai Park displays the world-famous embroideries of Soochow, Hunan, Kwangtung and Szechuan, ivory, jade, stone and wood carvings, gold and silver work, bamboo, rattan, palm leaf and straw work in a total of 1,300 items. The new landscape works from Chentu in beaten silver and filigree How Beautiful Our Land and Red Flag Unfurls in the West Wind are remarkable both for the message they convey and for their craftsmanship.
