Three Leaders of Men—Wilson, Gandhi and Lenin

BY EVELYN ROY

Three figures appeared upon the stage of the troubled to rally and found themselves. The first, in all its wars and feuds, was so-called "racism," and its military activities were confined to a free and independent India. The second was the "bourgeoisie," which was opposed to the idea of a united India. The third was Lenin, who believed in the necessity of a workers' revolution.

The "Swaraj" of Mr. Gandhi has been achieved in all its promises of self-government, and the Indian people are now enjoying the benefits of their independence. Wilson, on the other hand, has sought to establish a world organization that would prevent future wars and promote international cooperation.

Lenin, the Russian revolutionary, believed in the necessity of the workers' revolution to achieve socialism. He believed that the capitalist system was causing exploitation and suffering throughout the world, and that the workers of the world must unite to bring about a socialist society.

Lenin's goal was to abolish capitalism and establish a proletarian socialist state. He believed that this would be accomplished through the overthrow of the capitalist system and the establishment of a government by the working class. This would entail nationalization of industries, land reform, and the abolition of private property.

Wilson, on the other hand, believed in the importance of international cooperation and the establishment of a world organization to prevent future wars. He believed that the League of Nations would be able to resolve international conflicts peacefully.

Lenin's goal was to establish a workers' state, whereas Wilson's goal was to promote international cooperation.

The three leaders are compared in terms of their goals and methods. Wilson's goals were more idealistic, whereas Lenin's goals were more pragmatic. Gandhi's goals were between the two, focusing on the need for nonviolent resistance and self-reliance.

The three leaders are seen as representatives of the three classes: Wilson as the representative of the middle class, Gandhi as the representative of the working class, and Lenin as the representative of the proletariat.
