The Labor Movement in Palestine

By Agnes H.

The roots of the Palestine labor movement lie entirely outside of the native population. The great economic and industrial conditions prevailing in the world and the conditions of the workers, which render it so difficult for any kind of people's movement to develop, are not present in Palestine at all. The Jewish workers, like the Arab workers, have been brought into this world situation by the European situation. Nevertheless, Palestine already possesses 50,000 labor unions and labor parliaments, which are among the various patronizing, prevailing in the labor movement in the countries of Europe. The Jewish workers who have immigrated to Palestine during the last 15 to 20 years have always been a barrier to the growth of labor movements within the country, because so many of them are in immediate conflict with the native workers. The Jews are the new mark of the country, and it was entirely dependent on the political government for the protection of their rights and interests. The agrarian agreements formed by these societies among the native workers provide for work for all the farm laborers and it was of course inevitable that these societies should demand change from the same society, while these employed cheaper Arab labor.

The public works commenced after the war under the English protectorate created an increased demand for labor, and this could not have been avoided by more Jewish workers to be employed. So a new spring brought a new era to the labor movement of Palestine. Above all, the division between the Arab and the Jewish workers collapsed, and although no conclusions have been drawn until now, it is agreed that the nationalization of the trade unions, the nationalization of the railroad, and the nationalization of the agricultural community of the Jewish population in Jerusalem and neighboring towns. The labor movement of the Jews, in the early summer of 1921, was organized into large numbers of labor unions, and the four of these labor organizations were set up in the beginning of the nationalization of the trade unions, and these were to secure the interests of the Jewish workers at the first step, however difficult, towards a coming together of Arab and Jewish economic and social conditions in the country.

The revolutionary events are rapidly developing the class consciousness of the native workers. We can see this in the activities of the workers of Egypt and India, where they have left their petty-bourgeois leaders and taken up the class war. Palestine, and its neighbors in other parts of the Middle East, is a new case in exceptional treatment from the criminal political trial of the public worker.

The Publicity Department should keep the public informed of all criminal trials, in order to make the public understand the situation. The arrests of the workers in the factories, the jails, and the police stations, have given the public an opportunity to see the whole picture of the situation. The trials of the workers in the factories, the jails, and the police stations, have given the public an opportunity to see the whole picture of the situation.

The workers should be given the chance to hear the statements of the workers in the factories, the jails, and the police stations, and should be allowed to see the whole picture of the situation.

The Labor Movement in Palestine

By Arvigo

The roots of the Palestinian labor movement lie almost entirely in the economic development of the country. The great economic and social injustices of the country, the political backwardness of the country, the great power of the old,封建istic, and autocratic leadership, and the power of the big landowners, has been living under the yoke of this system of domination and exploitation. The workers, who have been suffering under these conditions, have been forced to organize and to fight for their rights. The labor movement in Palestine is a result of the development of the economy of the country, and the workers' struggle for their rights.

The Palestinian labor movement has been developing over the last 15 to 20 years. The national colonial character of this movement has been reflected in the growth of the Palestinian trade unions and the emergence of the Palestinian labor movement. The Palestinian labor movement has been influenced by the international labor movement, and it has been working to form an independent Palestinian labor movement in the country.

The Palestinian labor movement has been fighting for better wages, better working conditions, and to protect the rights of the workers. The labor movement has been working to form an independent Palestinian labor movement, and it has been working to form an independent Palestinian labor movement in the country.

What is needed to remedy these conditions:

In addition to other means for the relief of prisoners, the following means shall be taken:

1. Organization of an All-India Political and Class War Prisoners' Bureau with sub-bureaus in each province and important city, district, and in the main branches or functions:
   a. Legal
   b. Publicity
   c. Welfare and Relief

The Financial Department shall provide the assistance of expert lawyers for all political and class-war prisoners, to defend and protect the rights of prisoners before all tribunals, courts, and commissions, and to defend and protect the rights of prisoners before all tribunals, courts, and commissions.

The relief department shall provide help for all prisoners of war, and shall also provide help for all prisoners of war who are in need of help.

Political Prisoners in India

By E. R. S. B.

At the moment of writing there are between 20,000 to 25,000 political prisoners in Indian jails, undergoing sentences of varying lengths ranging from several months to several years. These prisoners are usually political activists, journalists, trade unionists, and others who have been arrested and detained on charges of sedition, sedition, or other similar offenses.

The political prisoners in India are divided into two main groups: the first group includes those who are detained under the provisions of the Indian Penal Code, and the second group includes those who are detained under the provisions of the Emergency Regulations.

Class War Prisoners:

In addition to the political prisoners there are thousands of workers and prisoners of war who are being subjected to excessive and inhuman treatment, and who are being denied the most basic rights of human beings. These workers and prisoners of war are being subjected to excessive and inhuman treatment, and are being denied the most basic rights of human beings.

RELIEF FOR RUSSIA

The International Workers' Relief

By A. Elizalde

When the International Workers' Relief entered into its struggle against the Russian government, it was difficult to judge beforehand how great the help of this ally would be to us. The aid given by the IWR to the Russian workers was not so great as to change the course of the revolution in Russia, but it certainly helped to strengthen the workers' movement.

Whether the aid was real or not, and whether it was of any use or not, we must take it upon ourselves to subscribe to the remaining 300,000 rubles of the IWR's capital.

When we discussed this question at the July conference in Berlin, the prospects of floating this loan appeared more favorable than they were at first, and there was a feeling that the loan was playing an important rôle in the political life of the country.
